D. C. Honors The Nation's Founder on Natal Day

Farewell Message Keynote of Services; Hundreds Visit Tomb At Mt. Vernon

George Washington, soldier, statesman and gentleman farmer, yesterday received the homage of the Capital which proudly took his name.

The 207th birthday anniversary of the first President was marked by a score of patriotic, civic and fraternal organizations in the great city which has grown by Washington's beloved Potomac as seat of government for the republic he fathered.

Across the river in Alexandria, even richer in associations with the revered patriot, more than 2,000 men marched down historic King street as a sharp northwest wind rippled flags in the clear February air and carried martial airs across the colonial city.

The journey to Mount Vernon, a delight for tourists in any season, became a solemn pilgrimage. The plain brick tomb on a wooded hillside of the great estate was banked with wreaths, sent by President Roosevelt and a dozen veterans' groups.

Farewell Address Read

On Capitol Hill Congress paid its traditional tribute as Senator Taft, of Ohio, read the Farewell Address to the Senate, while the House heard the familiar words repeated by Representative Fritz Lanham.

From the same message to the American people, Representative Joe Starnes, of Alabama, drew his text in a warning against "entangling alliances." He spoke in Memorial Continental Hall at the twenty-fifth joint celebration of Washington's Birthday by the Daughters of the American Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution and Children of the American Revolution.

Washington's keen interest in the transportation system of the young republic was recalled in picturesque ceremonies at the Georgetown terminus of the old Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, dedicated yesterday as a recreational waterway.

Flags Ring Monument

The white marble shaft which dominates the Mall was ringed with brilliant colors an hour after sunrise as flags of the 48 States were broken out around the base of the Washington Monument.

Peer of the horsemen of his day, Washington was honored by huntsmen of Fairfax County at early morning exercises in Langley, Va. Riders mounted and hounds held on leash, the huntsmen paused before the hunt to hear Albert Shields, of Arlington, speak on "Entangling Alliances."

The Association of Oldest Inhabitants heard Representative Stephen Bolles, of Wisconsin, at exercises held in the Old Union Engine House, Nineteenth and H streets northwest.

Services at Mount Vernon

Representative Lawrence Connery, of Massachusetts, and John F. Hunter, of Ohio, addressed Columbia Post No. 17, Irish War Veterans of the United States, who visited Christ Church, Alexandria.

Gaming Squad Shaken Up, 4 Transferred

Maj. Brown Refuses Comment Following Surprise Police Move

Four men, including Sergt. George C. Deyoe, were removed from the police vice squad yesterday by executive order of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police.

The transfers, which Maj. Brown explained were "for the good of the service," took effect immediately and no one was named to the gambling squad to replace them.

Others affected by the move which officials indicated to be "the beginning of a department reorganization" were Detectives William McEwen, Melvin M. Kite and Harry O. Dodson, all sent to various precincts for street patrol duty.

Maj. Brown Silent

Maj. Brown refused to reveal what prompted the transfers. He called Capt. George M. Little, veteran chief of the vice squad, to his office at 11 a. m. and informed him of his decision to change the men.

After the conference Capt. Little appeared stunned. He would not reveal what took place at the conference and refused to discuss any reason for the transfer of the men.

Sergt. Deyoe was ordered transferred to the Fourth Precinct; McEwen to the Eleventh Precinct; Dodson to the Tenth, and Kite to the Thirteenth.

McEwen Mystified

McEwen was the only man affected who could be reached last night. He said he had no idea why he was transferred.

"I can't understand it," he told reporters, "except that the department probably wants to make some

Senate Passes Offices Bill, FHA Fund Out

Action Expected In Conference to Supply Agency

The independent offices appropriation bill, granting nearly $2,000,000,000 to some 40 governmental agencies, was approved by the Senate yesterday without a record vote.

First of the major 1940 supply bills to pass the Senate, the measure goes back to the House containing two controversial alterations of the House bill: An appropriation of over $17,000,000 for two bitterly contested dams of the Tennessee Valley Authority and omission of the necessary authorization for the Federal Housing Authority to dip into its reserves to enable it to function for the next two months.

In anticipation of House refusal immediately to accept the changes, the following Senate conferees were appointed: Senators Glass, Byrnes, Russell, Adams and McCarran (Democrats), and Hale and Townsend (Republicans.)

Changes Held Certain

Congressional leaders were convinced yesterday that the House would ultimately approve the TVA appropriation, which would permit construction work to start on the Watts Bar Dam, on the upper Tennessee, and to continue on the Gilbertsville Dam, in Kentucky.

They were equally certain that the conferees would restore—and that the Senate would accept—a provision in the FHA section of the bill permitting that agency to use $2,300,000 of its own funds to pay salaries in March and April.

The authorization had been stricken from the House bill on the grounds that FHA had violated the antideficiency law, which requires that appropriations last throughout the fiscal year except in case of emergency. It was charged that Acting Budget Director Daniel W. Bell had advised FHA—when legislation last February greatly increased the work of the agency—to spend its funds and ask for a deficiency at a later date if necessary.

Bell Out of Town

Senator Glass, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, yesterday received a letter from Bell, explaining his position. It is understood that Bell maintained that the additional work of the FHA con-

Police 'Educators' Withdrawn, Pedestrian Law Takes Holiday

Maybe it was the sudden change in weather or perhaps it was the conspicuous absence of uniformed law and order at principal downtown intersections—but yesterday's observance of pedestrian laws went sadly by the boards.

What few persons ventured downtown to brave wintry blasts were so busy keeping coat collars up and heads down they completely ignored the fact that Washington has adopted new regulations governing pedestrian traffic.

Because of the holiday, the Police Department curtailed its force of "pedestrian educators" at busy corners and when The Washington Post-WJSV survey expedition sallied forth to keep its collective fingers on the pulse of anti-jaywalking progress, there was little to be found but a lot of shivering pedestrians who were far more interested in seeking warmth than soliciting safety.

It was generally agreed that Police Chief Brown had found the answer to his question: "I wonder what will happen when we remove our special details of crossing policemen?"

The mobile recording unit took up its position yesterday at Seventh and F streets northwest and during

Strike Closes 4 Car Plants; 17,800 Idle

Walkout Called 'Wildcat' by Martin; Plymouth, Chrysler, Dodge Are Closed

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Feb. 22.—Fist fighting on the assembly line by opposing factionalists in the United Automobile Workers today forced the closing of the Chrysler Corporation's Plymouth division and made more than 17,800 workers in four factories temporarily idle.

Late today Ed Hall, an International vice president aligned with the C. I. O.-supported U. A. W. faction, described the Plymouth trouble as a strike and placed pickets at plant gates urging men not to work. Hall said the management had refused to recognize his group's bargaining committee.

A leader of the Plymouth faction supporting Homer Martin in the battle for U. A. W. control said his group had "no dispute with the management and wants to work."

Calls it 'Wildcat Strike'

[Martin, the United Press said, termed the walkout a "wildcat strike."]

[Leo Lamotte, one of two presidents of Plymouth U. A. W., Local 51, said the shutdown was in protest of the company's recognition of the local officers of Martin's faction. After a recent court case in which Martin was granted the local's records, Pat McCartney, a Martin supporter, was elected president. Lamotte remained as president of the faction supported by the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

[H. L. Weckler, vice president of Chrysler Corporation, in charge of operations, said the company had not taken sides but had dealt with both groups in joint conference.

["This morning the shop committee of one of the factions asked for a meeting," Weckler said. "They were told that the management would consult the shop committee of the other faction and meet both groups at a convenient time.

["The management was told, however, that unless it bargained with the one faction alone there would be trouble in the plant. This threat was carried out about 12 o'clock."

Started With Fist Fights

["We have no obligation to observe a wildcat strike," Martin declared. "Since no strike vote was taken, Lamotte has violated every ethic of the labor movement."—Editor's note.]

Origin of today's fist fights was disputed. Martin supporters denied a report that they had demanded that assembly line workers remove C. I. O. buttons. They said that leaders of what they termed the "Communist" faction "went through the various departments, ordering their men to quit work."

The shutdown of the Plymouth plant, where 5,000 are employed, was followed by a layoff of 6,000 men on the day shift of the Briggs Manufacturing Co.'s Mack avenue plant which makes Plymouth bodies. Also affected were 1,500 Dodge and 800 Chrysler employes.

The Plymouth plant remained closed when the number of night shift workers reporting was insufficient to carry on operations, and 4,500 Briggs night shift workers also were sent home.

Paris Calls Army Chief From Africa

Staff Confers in Algiers as Italy Reinforces Libya; Fighting Denied

By the Associated Press.

Algiers, Algeria, Feb. 22.—Chiefs of France's armed forces in Africa met in extraordinary conference here today following reinforcement of Italian troops in Libya.

Gen. August Nogues, co-ordinator of French African forces which number some 100,000, planned to fly to Paris immediately after the meeting to report to Premier Daladier.

The urgent meeting followed persistent reports of a bloody clash between French and Italian troops in southeastern Tunisia. Although both the French resident general, Erik Labonne, and the Italian consulate general in Tunis denied that any clash had occurred, the military conference was considered highly significant.

84 Reported Killed

(Reports received in Paris by diplomatic circles and through private channels from Tunis said 80 Italians and 4 Frenchmen were killed last Friday on the Tunisia-Libyan border when Italian troops penetrated French territory from Libya and were driven back.)

Other border incidents had been reported in recent weeks, but none was confirmed officially. One was that an Italian airplane over Tunisian territory had been shot down by French anti-aircraft gunners.

Among the army and air corps leaders conferring with Nogues was Gen. Amedee Blanc, commander of French troops in Tunisia. Reinforcement of the 35,000 French troops in Tunisia with troops from Algeria and Morocco was said to be under consideration.

Military experts say the Tunisian defense line and natural difficulties of the terrain are such that the French probably could hold off many times their numbers.

Troops Ready to March

Reinforcement of Italian troops in Libya to a total of some 60,000, coupled with the presence there of Marshal Pietro Badoglio, chief of the Italian general staff, brought strict precautionary measures by the French army in Tunisia.

Troops throughout the protectorate, which has been an object of Fascist colonial agitation, were reported to have been confined to their barracks, ready to march at a moment's notice. Several contingents were said to have been sent to the fortified zone near the Libyan frontier.

Italian Seized as Spy

Arrests of Italians charged with espionage continued in Tunis. An official of the Italian consulate general, named Spada, was arrested and reports circulated that a map of Tunisia's defenses was found on him.

Reports that German troops had been moved through Italy to Libya also were heard in Paris diplomatic circles but could not be confirmed.

The French Mediterranean fleet had arrived at the Tunisian port of Bizerte the day before the reported border clash. A naval detachment was reported to have begun patrol-

Fire in Her Holds Under Control, Gulf Ship Radios

Galveston, Tex., Feb. 22 (AP).—The Coast Guard here announced the freighter Texas Banker radioed tonight the fire in her holds was under control and aid was not needed. Other ships rushing to the vessel were told to turn back. She was about 250 miles southeast of Galveston.

Coast Guard headquarters here reported an SOS call from the Texas Banker at 2:15 p. m. (E.S.T.), saying she was afire and asking assistance.

Two Coast Guard cutters were ordered to her rescue immediately.

Lewis Osborn, 35, Bridge Expert, Ends Life by Gas

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 22.—Lewis Osborn, 35, Wall Street broker and widely known bridge expert, was found dead today of illuminating gas poisoning in his apartment.

Police said there was a note addressed to his wife, Florence, bridge writer for The Washington Post and other newspapers, who was reported to be out of town.

James Findley, a handyman in the building, was knocked unconscious when the gas-filled apartment exploded as he turned on a light switch.

British Magazine Says Roosevelt Will Visit King

Special Cable to The Post.

London, Feb. 22.—The English news magazine, Cavalcade, first to suggest the visit of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth to the United States, today reports "with some authority" that one outcome of the royal visit to the White House will be a return visit by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt to Buckingham Palace."

The source of the authority was not disclosed. The magazine adds: "The President is fond of England, having been tutored here as a boy. He is of predominantly British descent, despite his Flemish middle name and Dutch last one.

"There is a constant stream of British visitors and also friends to the White House and the family mansion at Hyde Park, but because it might be politically embarrassing, it is explained to the press that they are friends of his mother."

Chatham, Mass., Feb. 22.—Government officials and shipping men of two continents tonight struggled feverishly to solve the mystery of an SOS from an unidentified vessel which reported she had been torpedoed and was sinking 360 miles south of the Azores.

Radiomen pondered the possibility it might have been a British oil tanker.

"Have been torpedoed by unknown submarine. Hole below water line. Sinking. Urgent"—was the radio message picked up by the radio marine station here and by the Portuguese Navy Department at Lisbon, Portugal.

It was signed with the unlisted call letters "PECC."

U. S. Isolation Over, Bullitt Tells French

Toasts Friendship At Washington's Birthday Banquet

By the United Press.

Paris, Feb. 22.—United States Ambassador Bullitt declared tonight America's geographical isolation was ended and that the United States was rearming to defend its democratic institutions.

The Ambassador spoke at the American Club's Washington Birthday banquet in the presence of Premier Daladier and other members of the French cabinet.

"At this moment the minds of Americans are dealing slowly and carefully with important problems," he said. "A growing apprehension that if there should be war in Europe we might be drawn into it is causing much thought at home. Indeed, never in my experience has the discussion of foreign affairs been so widespread or so intelligent. The discussion is thoroughly realistic. Only a negligible number of fanatics are arguing in terms of 'isms.' Americans as a people sustain religion and not religious wars.

Quotes Roosevelt

"The problem of United States defense today and tomorrow is the subject of the discussion."

Enumerating the benefits of liberty and freedom for which the United States largely is indebted to Washington, Bullitt said, "we feel these are worth defending and we intend to defend them."

Bullitt cited one of President Roosevelt's recent speeches in which the President said, "all about us are threats of new aggression—military and economic," to which the Am-

War Game Fleets Clash In Atlantic

President's Aide Reports Sharp Contacts In Defense of Panama

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., Feb. 22.—Contending fleets have fought several sharp engagements in the South Atlantic war games testing the American defenses against theoretical attack from Europe, said a radio message today from President Roosevelt's review ship, the cruiser Houston.

The dispatch, received at temporary White House offices shortly after 4 p. m. (E. S. T.) said "reports of the initial operations of the opposing fleets indicate that several sharp engagements resulted from contacts of scouting and detached groups with consequent probable minor changes in subsequent operations.

Contacts Numerous

"Contacts between scattered light forces have been numerous out in the Atlantic Ocean well to the eastward of the West Indies."

The message, signed by Capt. Daniel J. Callaghan, the President's chief naval aide, added the Houston was "proceeding leisurely toward the theater of fleet operations."

While the principal zone of operations in naval "Problem 20" is well to the north of the West Indies, the reference to numerous contacts between scattered light forces east of these islands indicated the "attacking" fleet was looking for a hole in the many passages leading to the Caribbean and the Panama Canal.

This was the fourth day of the President's 10-day voyage.

16 Degrees Forecast Today As Icy Gales Revive Winter

Winter returned to Washington yesterday with a vengeance, riding on icy gales which are expected to send the thermometer down to 16 degrees this morning, the Weather Bureau reported last night.

An area of low pressure moving in from the Midwest and Southwest ushered in the subfreezing temperatures early yesterday, when the thermometer hit a low of 25 degrees at 8 a. m. and only rose 3 degrees during the day to hit a high of 28 at 1 p. m., the forecaster said. Fair and continued cold is the prediction for today.

A light snow, too slight for measurement, fell in Washington as the cold snap abruptly cut off the District's flash of spring weather.

The Associated Press reported that the American Red Cross was rushing supplies for the relief of survivors of the tornado that cut a path nearly 3 miles long through the rural area surrounding Green's Cross Roads, N. C., Tuesday and killed three persons, one a 90-year-old farmer.

Dr. F. H. Garris, county health officer, said the town's only hospital was filled beyond capacity by the injured, which latest reports showed to be about 25.

Committee Adds 500 Ships; Navy Base Bill Seen Near Passage in House

By Robert C. Albright.

The Senate Military Affairs Committee yesterday lifted the authorized strength of the Army Air Corps to 6,000 first-class fighting planes, while the House pushed the President's $53,800,000 naval-base program to the brink of passage.

Voted tentative approval by the House were all important features of the Navy bill save one—the controversial $5,000,000 authorization for improvements in the harbor of Guam, last Navy post in the far Pacific.

A separate vote on the Guam item was ordered for today, following a 30-minute round of debate on a motion to strike it from the bill. The showdown on the outlying air base promised to be close, but Naval Affairs Chairman Vinson predicted the Guam authorization will win.

500-Plane Increase

After raising the "ceiling" of the Army's air strength from the 5,500 planes voted by the House to the 6,000 authorization asked by the War Department, the Senate Military Affairs Committee voted 14-to-0 approval of the $358,000,000 Army expansion bill already passed by the House.

Four members of the committee who have been most critical of Administration "secrecy" on foreign policy and plane sales to the French were not present or recorded. They were Senators Nye, of North Dakota, and Bridges, of New Hampshire (Republicans), and Clark, of Missouri, and Reynolds, of North Carolina (Democrats). Reynolds later told Chairman Sheppard he would have voted for the bill had be been present.

Increase in the Army plane authorizations to 6,000 ships followed a written request by Secretary of War Woodring that no limit on Army airplane strength be imposed.

War Department Satisfied

Woodring said it would be "to the advantage of National defense" and in the interest of economy merely to let the War Department buy as many planes as it can with the $170,000,000 the President recommended for that purpose.

"In the procurement of a large number of airplanes, there may be reductions in unit costs which will permit the purchase of a larger number of airplanes than the bill authorizes, within the amount of money set up in the War Department program," Woodring wrote the committee.

Chairman Sheppard said the committee decided a 500-plane increase in the House authorization would accomplish Woodring's objective, and that the War Department was satisfied.

First installment on the new airplane program—$50,000,000 to start 595 planes immediately to "tool" industry to a higher production rate—already has been tentatively approved by a House appropriations sub-committee.

$23,754,000 For Canal

As approved by the Senate committee, the new Army authorization bill proposes $300,000,000 for Air Corps improvements, $23,754,000 to make the Panama Canal impregnable and $34,500,000 to gear industry to war production through educational orders.

An amendment by Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, exempted such military supply orders from Walsh-Healey act and other labor restrictions on purchase of Government supplies. Other amendments assured officers and enlisted men of the National Guard and Reserve Corps of the same compensation, pension and retirement bene-

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

More than once White House guards have been appalled by the fear that some tourist's baby might inadvertently be born in the White House. They have even darkly suspected some visitors of timing their visits deliberately so that they might some day be able to say: "My son was born in the White House."

Harlan Miller

But the closest call of all came a few days ago, when an eminent young matron, whose approaching motherhood was no secret in the Capital, called on the President in his office, so the story goes, to discuss a political matter.

* * * *

As she urged her viewpoint (I have this on authority as unquestionable as a Senator's) she suddenly seemed to grow pale and languished. The President looked at her in alarm.

"For Heaven's sake, Mrs. ——," he exclaimed, "not here, not here!"

"—they weigh their hot telegrams"

Swamped with telegrams and postcards from some of the pressure groups, a few Senators' offices no longer read them, reply to them—thousands are exactly alike—or even count them. They merely weigh them or measure them. Telegrams are about 200 to the pound, and 1,248 postcards make a stack a foot high.

* * * *

For a man who hazes the press orally on so many conspicuous occasions, President Roosevelt sees a great deal of its handmaidens. At the White House he ping-pongs questions and answers back and forth with 100 reporters at about 80 press conferences a year. On his trips he is surrounded by them, and at Hyde Park a dozen or so come to his house twice a week for press conferences.

* * * *

Also, he dines with the newspapermen four times a year as their guest of honor—twice with the Gridiron Club, once with the National Press Club and once with the White House Correspondents.

Each spring he entertains the newsmen at a White House evening party; and when the editors meet each year in Washington he has them over for a friendly exchange of razzberries.

Maybe he doesn't hold them utterly beyond redemption.

"—life of a diplomat's child"

DIPLOMATIC DIDOES: Americans in the Capital marvel at the poise and polished manners of the children of the foreign diplomats, from one year up. But even in the atmosphere of embassies and legations children don't come by these easily; their parents say (perhaps to be polite) that naturally they're hellions just like American children.

* * * *

Their polish is not left to mere chance. Their parents drill them incessantly. I know an Ambassador who was dissatisfied with the way his son shook hands, and commanded him to walk 100 times up to a floor lamp, bow and shake hands with it.

* * * *

A diplomatic mother tells me that her daughter takes six different kinds of lessons outside of school hours—skating, swimming, fencing, riding, drawing and piano—and that she must walk for ten minutes each day with a heavy book on her head, for carriage.

Society Considers Refacing of Lower Part of Monument

Construction of new stone facing on the lower portion of the Washington Monument was considered yesterday by the Washington National Monument Society at a meeting held at the Metropolitan Club.

William R. Harr, secretary, declared Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the committee for the reconstruction of the monument base, reported his group had been unable to secure funds from Congress for the work.

The lower facing of the structure, it was explained, is a "slightly different color" from the rest and gives an unpleasing appearance to the monument.

Dr. Harry A. Garfield, former president of Williams College, was elected to fill the vacancy in the society's membership caused by the death of Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson.

N. Y. Exchange Drafts Changes In SEC Act

Stimulation of Capital, Retention of Protection Committee Objectives

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 22.—The New York Stock Exchange has begun preparing proposed amendments to the Federal securities and exchange act as one phase of Secretary of Commerce Harry L. Hopkins' recovery program, some leading financiers said today.

The exchange shortly will announce, they said, appointment of a committee to consider changes in consultation with the Nation's other securities exchanges and with Chairman William O. Douglas, of the SEC.

The purpose of the proposed changes definitely will not be to "unreform" the stock exchange, it was said.

But members of Hopkins' business advisory council, through whom a program designed to bring lasting recovery is being worked out in co-operation with Administration and big business executives, have urged that some restrictions of Federal securities laws were helping to dam up huge capital resources that should be providing business and employment.

Stimulate Flow of Capital

The committee's efforts will be directed to making changes in the law which would stimulate the flow of dollars into industry through securities markets without removing the basic protection to investors which underlies the whole SEC theory of operation.

Both President William McC. Martin, jr., of the exchange—who was elected when SEC-sponsored "reform" swept the membership—and Carle C. Conway, industrialist, who headed the "Conway committee" which drew up the exchange "reform" program, were represented as still feeling strongly that the fundamental purposes of the securities and exchange act are sound.

However, it was explained that when Hopkins began canvassing opinions of big business leaders during the past two months to find out what he could do to make business "click," many told him SEC modifications would have to be made.

Hopkins was said to have appointed Conway to the advisory council primarily to handle that problem.

In general discussions two points are said to have been repeatedly brought up.

Federal Inquiries Feared

First, many were reported to have said that, although there is no "sit-down strike of capital," many wealthy men have kept their fortunes out of the equity securities markets because they feared Federal investigation and possible public censure and obloquy because of the SEC procedure of obtaining and sometimes making public reports on such transactions.

Second, present restrictions are said to have placed many obstacles in the way of organizations and mergers, especially in the utility field under the integration program, and that if they were removed, many large companies could embark on expansion programs which have lain on the shelf for months and even years.

There has also been talk of curtailing some discretionary powers of the SEC which are claimed by some to act as a deterrent to big-scale common stock buying.

"Poverty Must Go"

Grinnell, Iowa, Feb. 22 (AP).—Harry L. Hopkins, who is expected to outline a joint Administration-business plan to effect permanent recovery in a Des Moines address Friday, declared here today "we cannot continue as a democracy forever with 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 men unemployed.

"Poverty in America must be abolished," the Secretary of Commerce stated in a talk to the Grinnell College student body. "A way must be found, and a way will be found."

Barkley Calls Senate Leaders To Map Plans

Will Meet Committee Chairmen Tomorrow To Speed Legislation

By the Associated Press.

Senate Majority Leader Barkley said yesterday he would call chairmen of major Senate committees into a conference tomorrow to map out a legislative program and seek its early enactment.

"In order to co-ordinate the work of the different legislative committees and facilitate their action on legislation now pending," Barkley said, "I intend to have a conference with the chairmen on this legislation and the likelihood of early reports."

Noting that although the Senate had passed only two major legislative proposals—the $725,000,000 emergency WPA appropriation and the independent offices appropriations bill—Barkley said he did not believe this was unusual for the start of the session.

He indicated, however, that he hoped to outline the legislative program definitely and speed up its consideration by the Senate, which has been in recess much of the time during the first seven weeks of its session because of lack of work to do.

Barkley said it was his understanding that there would be no new tax program, with the exception of re-enactment of existing nuisance taxes.

Jackson Asks for Unity

By the United Press.

Topeka, Kans., Feb. 22.—Robert H. Jackson, United States Solicitor General, said tonight that the Democratic Party was being divided over secondary issues and unless the Democrats patch up their troubles "we do not know where the wrecking will end."

"It would be idle to deny that certain great problems of foreign and domestic policy are not being adequately dealt with," he said, "and that the time is growing late and the country is growing weary. It would be equally idle to deny that disputes within our own party are largely responsible and that many of these time-wasting fights are over issues that, whatever their merits, are of secondary importance both to the country and even t othose involved."

Jackson, one of the President's close advisers and mentioned as a possible successor to former Justice Louis D. Brandeis as a member of the Supreme Court, spoke at a banquet of the Washington Day Club. His remarks climaxed a day of Democratic Party "love feasting."

Jackson described the party's greatest danger as "a growing suspicion that its leaders have become so divided and distracted with personal and local politics that it does not have capacity to agree on policies to run the Government."

"Unless the Democratic Party is willing to accept a national leadership from the President, it can at best have only the leadership of a coalition of local leaders," he said.

He said there was nothing to reports that the resident and a small group of advisers were attempting to dominate the party.

Police 'Educators' Withdrawn, Pedestrian Law Takes Holiday

a half-hour stay, the recording crew discovered only one person who actually placed the law above a desire to get somewhere in a hurry.

Noticed standing on the corner waiting for a green light, the man was approached and questioned. He said his name was Rudolph Henfer, of Chevy Chase, and he was standing on the curb "because the law says that is what I should do."

Drivers Blamed

"No siree," he added, "I don't think these people give a hang what happens to them. Even if they don't care what happens to them, at least they should respect the law. Maybe I don't like some parts of the new regulations, myself, but, well—law is law."

The majority of those interviewed by The Post WJSV survey staff were of the opinion something should be done to impress right-turning drivers with the necessity of doing their share in the pedestrian protection movement.

"We can't expect everything to be perfect," said a bystander who declined his name, "but I feel the authorities could improve their new scheme by doing a bit of 'educating' work on the motorists. We walkers can't do the whole job—it takes the co-operation of everyone using the streets. I think we'll make out all right with this control plan if we all get behind it."

Safety Period Asked

The first in a series of broadcasts describing progress of the pedestrian regulation and protection efforts was heard last night over WJSV. Representative William T. Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, chairman of a special House Traffic Sub-committee, expressed his opinion of the program while standing at Thirteenth and F streets northwest. He advocated an "absolute safety" period for walkers when all vehicular traffic is required to remain at a standstill.

Until the new law becomes effective with penalties, The Post and WJSV will continue their joint survey of public opinion, recording interviews and word-pictures of conditions for use on the air. The next broadcast is scheduled tomorrow during Arthur Godfrey's "Sun dial" program and again at 7 p. m.

Schools Absorb 27.9% of District's General '37 Budget

Schools absorbed 27.9 per cent of the funds for operation and maintenance of general departments of the city government of Washington in 1937, according to an analysis released yesterday by the Bureau of the Census.

The total spent for schools out of $36,642,265 for the general government was $10,239,171. The next heaviest expenditure was for hospitals, amounting to $3,921,662, or 10.7 per cent. The police department came next, with a total of $3,719,077, or 10.1 per cent.

Total revenue receipts were $43,917,338, of which $22,070,626, 50.3 per cent, came from property taxes, with 15.5 per cent or $6,812,426 coming from grants. The latter figure includes $5,000,000 from the Federal Government.

Crosley Appeals Broadcast Ruling

The Crosley Corporation has appealed to the District Court of Appeals from a recent decision of the Federal Communications Commission, denying the firm's continuation of superpower experiments at Station WLW, Cincinnati. The corporation had asked extension of special experimental authority to use a power of 500 kilowatts during unlimited hours of operation.

Mass Meeting To Protest Anderson Ban

50 Organizations to Attend Session Sunday In Defense of Singer

A mass meeting in protest against refusal of the Daughters of the American Revolution to permit use of Constitution Hall for a concert by Marian Anderson, colored contralto, and against refusal of the Board of Education to permit use of Central High School auditorium for this concert, was called by the Marian Anderson Citizens' Committee yesterday. It will be held in the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, Columbia road and Fourteenth street northwest, Sunday at 4 p. m.

The board turned down the application at its last meeting, holding that it was prohibited by law from renting public property to be used in a profit-making enterprise. It was pointed out the singer was to receive $1,750 for the concert. Constitution Hall is private property.

50 Organizations Represented

The Rev. John L. Mixon, director of the department of social welfare of the Washington Federation of Churches, was announced as chairman of the protest meeting, at which representatives of more than 50 organizations have indicated they will voice their protest.

A letter was directed to be sent to Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., asking that the two lectures remaining in the Bronson-Cutting memorial lecture series be removed from Constitutional Hall to a place more fitting unless the Daughters of the American Revolution abolish what was described as a policy of racial discrimination.

Board Hearing Asked

Charles H. Houston, chairman of the committee, was directed to request the Board of Education for a hearing in the matter of the protest at its next meeting. He was directed also to "take such emergency action as may be necessary" in the event that the board declines to reconsider its refusal of the auditorium and to reverse its position.

The committee in charge of the Sunday mass meeting was named to include U. Simpson Tate, Miss Bertha Blair and Jerome Osborne.

Two Pension Plans Called 'Fantastic'

By the Associated Press.

Two old-age pension plans now before Congress were described as "fantastic" and disastrous to national economy before a Congressional committee here yesterday.

Dr. Frederic Dewhurst, of New York, an economist associated with the Twentieth Century Fund, at a House Ways and Means Committee hearing said both plans would impose extremely heavy tax burdens upon the people and small corporations.

"The adoption of these bills would result in a substantial increase in unemployment," Dewhurst said.

One of the proposed plans would provide monthly pensions of $60, the other up to $200. The money would be raised through gross income or transaction taxes.

Total operating revenues were less than 1937 by $95,549,267 or 21.0%. Surplus was $3,010,781 equal to 0.46% (23 cents per share) upon the outstanding Capital Stock (par $50) as compared with 2.9% ($1.45 per share) in 1937.

A dividend of 1% ($0.50 per share) was paid December 20, 1938, and charged to Profit and Loss.

FINANCE

Total funded debt was reduced $6,482,910, due to payment at maturity of $9,646,000 Equipment Trust Obligations, $1,100,000 Thirty-year 4% Bonds, $1,349,500 Sunbury, Hazleton & Wilkes-Barre Railway Company First Mortgage 6% Bonds and redemptions made through operation of sinking funds. On a 2.70% basis, $6,330,000 Fifteen-year 2¾% Equipment Trust Certificates were sold during the year to pay for new equipment.

ELECTRIFICATION

Electrification program east of Harrisburg has been completed thus greatly improving and speeding up east and west transportation of through passengers and freight. These electrified services have resulted in improvements and economies in operation comparable with those realized from the electrified operations inaugurated in 1935 between New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

NEW EQUIPMENT

At a cost approximating $8,436,000, 1,000 gondola cars, 8 special type freight cars, 2 new design passenger coaches and 20 electric passenger locomotives were ordered. More than 1,000,000 man-hours of employment in the Company's shops besides further employment in outside industries will be required to complete this work.

IMPROVED SERVICE

The largest fleet of advance design passenger trains in the East—between New York, Philadelphia, Washington, and Chicago and St. Louis—was placed in service on faster and more convenient schedules. The Broadway Limited schedule between New York and Chicago was reduced to 16 hours and to 14½ hours between Philadelphia and Chicago, the fastest ever established for this train between these cities. Other schedules were quickened and rearranged to provide the maximum of service and more convenient times of arrival and departure for the public.

Fast freight service operating on regular schedules now furnish quick reliable service for carload and less than carload traffic, thus affording shippers the opportunity of developing wider markets and making possible lower inventories, accelerated sales and increased production.

PASSENGER AND FREIGHT RATES

On March 8, 1938, a 5% increase in freight rates on certain items and 10% on others was authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission. These increases though helpful, fell far short of meeting the financial needs of the railway transportation industry.

On July 25, 1938, basic passenger fares in Eastern Territory were increased to 2½ cents per mile in coaches for an experimental period of eighteen months.

Basic passenger fares generally have been constructed on a fixed rate per mile without regard to the distance traveled by the passenger. The railroads in Eastern Territory have filed tariffs with the Commission proposing, effective during the time of the World's Fair in New York and the Golden Gate International Exposition in San Francisco in 1939, a passenger rate basis which will reduce the rate per mile for round trip tickets as the distance traveled increases.

For those visiting both San Francisco and New York a special flat round trip rate of $90 in coaches and $135 in Pullman cars with a choice of routes will be available.

TAXES

During 1938 American railroads paid in taxes almost ten cents of every dollar of their operating revenues. Since 1921 the tax burden has shown an almost steady upward trend and has practically doubled. Other forms of transportation pay much lower taxes in relation to their revenue, primarily because they do not own the rights of way or roadbeds over which they operate. The maintenance and protection of tracks owned by the railroads together with all taxes cost the railroads 31.7 cents per dollar of revenue in 1937.

In 1938 the railroad's taxes equalled the interest paid on their debt, were about the same as their net railway operating income and amounted to about $367 per employee.

NATIONAL RAILROAD POLICY

The management of this Company for many years has been endeavoring to aid in the development of a constructive national transportation policy. On September 20, 1938, the President of the United States appointed a committee of railroad labor and management to consider the transportation problem and recommend legislation. On December 23, the committee presented to the President a comprehensive report, including a survey of all transportation agencies, with particular reference to the competitive relationship between the various agencies and the extent of government subsidies to some of them. The committee's basic recommendation was that a definite national transportation policy of equalization be adopted which would provide a fair field for all and special favors for none, particularly with respect to regulation, taxation and subsidies.

STOCKHOLDERS

Capital stock of the Company at the end of the year was owned by 214,532 holders, a decrease of 2,097 compared with December 31, 1937. The average number of shares owned was 61.4.

The cooperation extended by the security holders, the public and the employes in getting people to travel and ship via The Pennsylvania Railroad is appreciated.

G.W. Graduates Hear Music, Not Advice

Opera Star Sings At Mid-Year Finals; Aranha Honored

George Washington University last night said it with music to 370 graduating students, Ambassador Nelson T. Johnson and Dr. Oswaldo Aranha, Brazilian foreign minister.

In a unique departure from conventional commencement procedure fewer than 200 words of advice were addressed to recipients of degrees and certificates, who instead were entertained with a half-hour recital by Gladys Swarthout, beautiful mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

President Cloyd H. Marvin, conferring an honorary doctor of laws, welcomed Dr. Aranha as a "wise leader and discriminating diplomatist" who has "played a fine part in the advancement of Brazil and the growth of inter-American solidarity."

The citation of honor to Johnson, who received an LL.D. from his alma mater four years ago, praised the American Ambassador's "helpful counseling in governmental affairs during these war-torn days in China."

Nearly 2,000 friends and relatives of the class of 1939 attended the midyear graduation exercises in Constitutional Hall.

D.C. Taxpayers Laud Overton for Financing Plan

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, chairman of the District subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, was told yesterday that Washington taxpayers owed him a "vote of thanks" for his plan to apportion expenses of the District government on the basis of Federal and private land holdings here.

Rufus S. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, in a letter to Overton, informed him of the indorsement by the association's executive committee of the bill introduced by him.

"Since it sets up a definite percentage, based on the amount of land owned by the Federal Government compared to the total privately-owned land area of the District . . . it means that each year District officials and taxpayers would know almost the exact amount to expect from Uncle Sam," Lusk wrote.

McIntyre Better; Dies Will Leave Hospital Today

Although his condition is improving, Marvin H. McIntyre, secretary to President Roosevelt, suffering from intestinal influenza, may remain in the Naval Hospital for ten days or two weeks, physicians said yesterday.

Representative Dies (Democrat), of Texas, who underwent an appendectomy a week ago, plans to leave Emergency Hospital today.

Naval Hospital physicians said Representative Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, suffering from bronchitis, was continuing to improve. At George Washington University Hospital, Rabbi M. R. Yoelson, father of Al Jolson, the comedian, was recovering from pneumonia.

Justice Stanley Reed, of the Supreme Court, was reported up and about after an attack of influenza.

Sergt. Deyoe and Kite are both on leave and are out of the city. They were not notified of their transfer, Dodson could not be reached for comment.

Transfer of the four men, who were described as "the best men I had" by Capt. Little, leaves the vice squad short handed. Eight of the ten remaining men on the squad are assigned to work on Alcohol Beverage Control Board complaints.

"This leaves only two men to take care of all the gambling and other types of cases we have here," Capt. Little declared.

On Squad Many Years

Deyoe and McEwen have been on the vice squad for many years and it is said that they know more about the gambling situation in Washington than any other men.

Deyoe has been with Capt. Little since 1925 and served as an acting sergeant most of that time. He was second in command of the group. Less than a year ago he was given the rank of full sergeant.

McEwen has been on the squad for about ten years. Once previously, he was transferred after a gun flight with a carload of bootleggers, but was returned in less than a year.

Dodson and Kite have only been with the organization for the last few years.

Maj. Brown would make no comment about the rumors of an impending purge in the department. The Post learned, however, that an investigation has been under way for several months and that reorganization is scheduled for several other detective bureau squads.

"I think it increases efficiency to transfer men from time to time," Maj. Brown commented.

Discharged Clerk Jumps to Death

Hartford, Conn., Feb. 22 (AP).—For several minutes today Henry M. Mueller, 37, recently discharged bank clerk, knelt on a narrow ledge near the top of the 65-foot Society for Savings Bank Building here.

A group of onlookers screamed "Call the fire department!"

Mueller shouted:

"If you call the fire department, I'll jump."

Just then he heard the approach of a hook and ladder truck. He jumped to his death.

Kidnaper Admits Slaying Old Friend

Joliet, Ill., Feb. 22 (AP).—Elvin Wood was placed under guard in jail today while the body of the life-long friend he slew in a bungled ransom plot was recovered from the Illinois River.

The body of Abner Nelson, 38, wealthy bachelor farmer, was removed from the river near Seneca.

In a confession last night Wood related he went to Nelson's farm last Sunday, shot him, drove to a bridge and dropped the body into the river. He said he had planned to demand ransom from Nelson's relatives.

Symphony Fund Drive Extended Until March 1

The ninth annual campaign for a sustaining fund to assure continuance of the National Symphony Orchestra yesterday was extended to March 1, as officials disclosed that pledges so far amount to only 65.8 per cent of the $111,000 quota.

L. Corrin Strong, vice chairman of the campaign, appealed to "public-spirited Washingtonians" not yet solicited in the drive to contribute voluntarily.

U. S. Promises 'Non-Political' Aid to League

State Dept. Pledges Help in Economics And Social Fields

By the Associated Press.

A Washington's Birthday token to the League of Nations went from here yesterday in the form of a greater collaboration by the United States in the League's technical and nonpolitical activities.

A State Department note to the League secretary general, Jules Avenol, said this Government would "consider, in a sympathetic spirit, means of making its collaboration more effective."

(League headquarters in Geneva declared that the note had produced an "excellent impression." It was the first response received by the League to a circular letter sent to all nonmember nations, urging them to work more closely with League states.)

The note replied to a communication from the secretary general dated October 17, 1938. The fact that it took the State Department four months to write its response was believed to mean that the department had given the matter much study. Today's action was taken at a time when the League's influence seems to have declined because of the defection of a number of large nations.

The technical and nonpolitical collaboration involves working with the League in economic matters, opium control, white slavery elimination, and the like. It does not involve the United States in any political commitments, officials said.

The State Department's note said: "The League has been responsible for the development of mutual exchange and discussion of ideas and methods to a greater extent and in more fields of humanitarian and scientific endeavor than any other organization in history. The United States Government is keenly aware of the value of this type of general interchange and desires to see it extended."

Much still remains to be done, the department said, in health, social, economic and financial fields.

"This Government," it informed the League, "regards each sound step forward in these fields as a step toward the establishment of that national and international order which it believes is essential to real peace."

Recall Daniels For Inquiry, Kennedy Asks

Representative Assails 'Violations' of U. S. Rights in Mexico

By the Associated Press.

Representative Kennedy (Democrat), New York, yesterday coupled sharp criticism of the State Department with a legislative proposal asking President Roosevelt to recall United States Ambassador to Mexico Josephus Daniels so Congress could question him on Mexican affairs.

Daniels should be questioned, Kennedy said, about the "reasons for the futility of his protests to the Mexican government in respect to violations which are constantly recurring despite the fact that the State Department has led the American people to believe that negotiations with Mexico are pending which will satisfactorily result in adjustments caused by earlier outrages against American citizens since the inception of the (President) Cardenas dictatorship.

"Surely Something Wrong"

Kennedy has repeatedly criticized the Mexican regime. Recently he said that Mexico's confiscation of American property, it "anti-American" tariffs and "its co-operation with and subservience to the Nazi regime of Germany" had created a grave situation.

"There surely must be something wrong in our representation in Mexico," Kennedy said today.

"The Mexican muddle must be cleaned up. Apparently Daniels is responsible. Whether he is to blame or his immediate superiors in the State Department is not clear."

Rankin Urges Potomac TVA

Declaring that Washington's defenses are inadequate from the standpoint of an ample supply of electric power, Representative Rankin (Democrat) Mississippi, urged in the House yesterday passage of his bill to create a Potomac Valley Authority.

He also said the District's electric bill was $3,800,000 a year greater than it would be if rates were reduced to the TVA level.

Baltic Nations' Ideals Likened To America's

Latvian, Lithuanian Ministers Speak on Washington's Birthday

Common ideals of the United States and the Baltic republics were defined last night as "real freedom, real democracy and real equality" by Alfred Bilmanis, Latvian Minister, speaking to the Baltic American Society of Washington at the Admiral Club.

He spoke at a joint celebration of the independence days of Estonia, February 24, and Lithuania, February 16, and the birthday of George Washington. "The ideals of fine Americans are highly appreciated in the Baltic countries," he said, speaking of the Friends of America Society in Latvia, which also celebrated Washington's Birthday yesterday.

Povilas Zadikis, Lithuanian Minister, told the group of his country's fight for independence, when he himself was held prisoner in Leningrad. The republic's freedom, he said, "was not a gift, but the result of our most determined efforts. Many heroes met their deaths in Siberia, but that did not stop us. We dared to dream of freedom."

Opening with the national anthems of Lithuania and Estonia, the program included folk songs by Mrs. Olly Kukepu, soprano, and Miss Hilda Raud, alto, both of the Finnish Opera Guild in New York, and Karl Lamp, cellist, of Boston. Dr. Ellis Haworth, president of the society, was chairman.

Killer Suspect Seized by Posse; 2 Deputies Shot

By the United Press.

Petersburg, Va., Feb. 22.—Willie Bradshaw, 61-year-old colored former convict wanted for the murder last Christmas of a Halifax County, Va., sheriff, was tracked down by bloodhounds near here tonight and captured by a posse of around 50 men.

He was placed in City Jail here under heavy guard and will be returned immediately to Halifax, where he is charged with slaying Sheriff Herbert A. Boelte.

Bradshaw was spotted by two deputies earlier in the day, and instead of surrendering, fired at them with a shotgun. The deputies were wounded slightly in the legs with birdshot and later joined the posse seeking Bradshaw.

The colored suspect was charged with slaying Boelte when the sheriff and Deputy John Hatcher went to his home at Scottsburg to question him. Hatcher said he and Boelte entered the house and that Boelte had started upstairs when he was shot.

The sheriff received the full blast of a shotgun in the neck and head when he parted a curtain which covered part of the stairs, Hatcher said. Bradshaw fled and remained at liberty until tonight.

No charges had been made against Bradshaw when the two officers went to his house to question him, but he reportedly had been "acting suspiciously" since he was released from a penitentiary after serving a sentence for robbery.

Nearby States Enthuse Over Folk Festival

Announcement that the National Folk Festival is to be repeated in Washington this year has awakened enthusiastic response in the District's neighbor States. Last year's performance marked the first time Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware participated in the festival. It also marked a renascence of interest in the folk arts and traditions of these States and the discovery of a hitherto unsuspected wealth of folk material.

The sixth annual folk festival will be held at Constitution Hall April 27, 28 and 29 under the sponsorship of the Washington Folk Festival Association. From now until April preliminary festivals will be held in neighboring States to select participants for the national event.

Plans for Maryland's participation will be made at a meeting Tuesday at the University of Maryland. A co-operative committee headed by Dr. H. F. Cotterman of the College of Agriculture already has been appointed by President H. C. Byrd.

Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 22 (AP).—A legislative committee was told today that "membership in a nudist organization carries a great deal of weight in getting bank loans and credit ratings' 'in Cleveland.

The committee is considering a bill to outlaw nudist camps frequented by both sexes.

Once Again, Barge Passes Through C. & O. Canal

Lock No. 1 of the old Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, where it originates in Georgetown, was flooded yesterday as "Mutt," aged coalboat mule, pulled a barge carrying the Marine Band through the man-made waterway, its first boat in 24 years. Ceremonies on George Washington's Birthday dedicated canal as a recreational park

The interest George Washington had taken in the creation of a waterway to Cumberland and his realization of the importance of conserving our wild life and natural beauties were recalled yesterday in broadcast ceremonies dedicating the old Chesapeake and Ohio canal as a recreation and historic park.

Nearly 1,000 spectators lined the banks of the canal and nearby bridges as a section of the United States Navy Band drifted through the gates of Lock No. 1 on a barge towed by the veteran canal mule Mutt, who celebrates his thirty-eighth birthday this month.

As the band slowly rose to full view on the waters entering the lock from the upper gates, Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, paid tribute to the determination and patriotism of the men who had built the canal in realization of Washington's dream.

On these waters had been demonstrated Fulton's early models of the steamboat, he continued, and on their banks still stands the former home of Francis Scott Key, composer of the National Anthem; and at this spot Maj. Pierre Charles l'Enfant, who prepared for the First President the plans for the National Capital, met the three commissioners appointed by Washington to supervise the work in 1791.

Oscar L. Chapman, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, in a dedicatory speech, reminded his hearers that Washington had urged the importance of conservation in the day of abundance. The canal, he added, would take its place as a part of the Nation's conservation program.

Charles Stewart and Sylvester Pennyweather, who had tended the locks in the canal's commercial days, were interviewed before the microphone by Arthur Godfrey, radio announcer. Pennyweather is 80 and Stewart was celebrating his seventy-seventh birthday yesterday as well as Washington's 207th.

Before the lock-side ceremonies, a re-enactment of the ground-breaking ceremonies for the canal was broadcast from the Interior Department studios.

Thousands at Valley Forge

Valley Forge, Pa., Feb. 22 (AP).—On snow-powdered hills where Gen. Washington and his tattered continentals endured a winter of hardship to win American independence patriotic organizations pledged themselves anew today to keep America the land of the free.

Honoring the Nation's first President on the 207th anniversary of his birth, thousands came to lay wreaths at his statue and hear his doctrines extolled as the essence of American democracy.

Joining the pilgrimage to the historic fields—now a State park—were some members of the Communist Party who hailed Washington as "Father of the American Revolution."

A census of the statues and portraits of George Washington in the District, recently attempted by The Washington Post and Representative Sol Bloom (Democrat), of New York, ran into a snag when it was discovered that Bloom had "flooded the market" during the bicentennial celebration in 1932.

Bloom, famous for his avid interest in matters pertaining to the "Father of His Country," couldn't give an accurate estimate.

Patriotic Body Told to Guard Against 'Isms'

Rep. Starnes Addresses Joint Celebration For Washington

Washington's warning against entangling alliances was emphasized by Representative Starnes, of Alabama, at a celebration of Washington's Birthday in Memorial Continental Hall yesterday.

It was the twenty-fifth joint celebration of the Children of the American Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution, Sons of the Revolution and Daughters of the American Revolution.

"Must Be No Persecution"

"The dangers we must guard against in these days," Starnes added, "are the demands of organized minorities seeking to impose their will. There must be no persecution of racial and religious minorities . . ."

"Today there is evidence," he declared, "of the spread of doctrines of government by foreign influences within our borders which are destructive to democracy. These doctrines are communism, fascism and nazism. Undoubtedly each has the moral and probably the financial support of the parent government. We should deport every alien agitator who advocates a theory of government contrary to constitutional representative democracy . . ."

Wreath Placed at Monument

At the conclusion of his talk, a committee headed by Rosalyn Buchanan, of the Children of the American Revolution, took a large wreath from the hall and placed it at the foot of the Washington Monument. This year's exercises were directed by the C. A. R.

Solos and ensemble singing by students of the Gordon Junior High School provided a high spot in the ceremonies, which were presided over by William G. Pennington, junior president, District unit, C. A. R. He has introduced by Mrs. James Henry Harper, State president of the same society.

Oldest Inhabitants Convene Here to Honor Washington

Rep. Bolles Extols His 'Great Vision' And Asks Improved Government For Capital at Meeting in Old Firehouse

A small group of Washingtonians, "gentlemen of the old school," yesterday gathered to hallow the memory of George Washington, whose dream of a great union of States some of them saw almost shattered in the dark days of the '60's.

In their meeting hall above the old Union Engine House, Nineteenth and H streets northwest, the group, members of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District, heard Representative Bolles, of Wisconsin, extol the "great vision . . . personal sacrifice" of Gen. Washington and add a word about the present-day government of the city which bears his name.

"There should be a new association of organized effort to improve the patched-up government under which this city is operated," he asserted.

The program opened with the singing of "America." Washington's Farewell Address was read by W. S. Torbert, member of the association. The program committee included Dr. Hugh M. Smith, chairman, James F. Duhamel, John Clagett Proctor, Fred A. Emery, Jesse C. Suter, Theodore W. Noyes, Elra C. Palmer, J. Eliot Wright and Horace J. Phelps.

Britain Warns Fascists of Her Strength

Tokyo, Berlin, Rome Would Be 'Shocked,' Chamberlain Says

By Joseph Driscoll.

Special Cable to The Post.

London, Feb. 22.—Prime Minister Chamberlain tonight delivered a veiled warning to Germany, Italy and Japan that they would be shocked if ever they measured arms with Britain and her allies and friends, including presumably the United States.

He disguised an otherwise blunt defiance in more veils than Salome knew. In fact, he went all the way back to Shakespeare for quotations to drive home his point:

"Come the three corners of the world in arms, and we shall shock them."

The quotation is from "King John," one of Shakespeare's least known plays.

Despite the diplomatic phrasing of the Chamberlain message, his Lancashire audience at Blackburn, readily interpreted the "three corners of the world in arms" to mean Berlin, Rome and Tokyo. Nor was this interpretation discouraged in official quarters in London, where Chamberlain was credited with evolving a Shakespearean code of sugar-coat bits of advice to aggressive nations.

The prime minister had been defendnig his government's unprecedented expenditure for defense, which will be £580,000,000 ($2,726,000,000) in the coming fiscal year and probably more than £2,000,000,000 ($9,400,000,000) when the five-year arms expansion program is completed in 1942.

"These huge figures," he said, "will serve to bring home to us all the immensity of our financial resources which enable us not only to find such colossal sums, but to contemplate their expenditure without any appreciable disturbance in the confidence which is the basis of our financial credit."

Then declaring, "We shall shock them," he added:

"I do not speak these words in any boastful, still less in any aggressive spirit.

"Our armaments threaten no one, nor have we any thought but of friendliness toward any people in the world. My own most earnest desire in life is to see the establishment of peace and of confidence that it can be preserved, and I believe that as soon as a substantial measure of that confidence can be achieved, it will be possible to set about the task of disarmament by general agreement.

"No country embarks upon this ruinous form of expenditure for the fun of the thing. They do it because they are afraid of what may happen to them if they disarm. Remove that fear and disarmament will follow automatically."

Isolation Over, Bullitt Declares

bassador added, "the United States, therefore, is rearming.

"In Washington's day the Atlantic and Pacific oceans afforded us almost complete security. Then there was some measure of sanctity in the pledged word and good faith among nations. That no longer always is true."

Bullitt said the United States was happy to be numbered among the nations striving for peace. "We know that we will not start a war with any nation," he said. "We are not in the habit of starting wars."

Toasting Daladier, Bullitt concluded, "I raise my glass to the friendship of the United States and France; friendship which has meant much to both nations in the past and means much in the present. May our friendship serve the establishment of peace on earth."

The French premier saluted President Roosevelt, "one of the guiders of the world's peaceful will and who is showing France so many marks of his affectionate solicitude" and then declared that France can accept only "peace with honor," and never will cede to threat of force, blackmail or trickery.

Daladier said France, however, is ready to participate in limitation or reduction of armaments.

Torpedoed Ship Off Azores, Radio Says; Empress Boat Visits Position, Finds No Trace

Torpedo

men pointed out that the letter "C" in international code was the same as "ten" and pondered the possibility that the "PECC" might stand for "Pecten."

London advices reported a British oil tanker Pecten left Trinidad February 8 and was due in Southampton, England, next Monday. The Pecten was last reported in the vicinity of the position given in the SOS.

Efforts to reach the Pecten by wireless were unavailing, but radiomen pointed out that probably only one radio operator was aboard and he might have been asleep.

Shipping authorities at Horta, the Azores, said officers of a vessel that arrived there last Friday reported sighting two submarines of unidentified nationality south of Fayal island, in the general area from which the SOS emanated.

The British vessel Empress of Australia, arriving at the position given in the message radioed she had sighted neither the vessel nor any wreckage. Later, she advised she was proceeding and turned over the search to the Greek steamer Mount Pelion, which reported she was near the "PECC" position and was making rapid headway under forced draft.

Meanwhile, Portuguese naval authorities said they had not dispatched rescue ships from the Azores because they believed other shipping was much nearer.

Because the SOS was not repeated, radio officials believed that if the call was genuine the torpedoed vessel had sunk.

The SOS gave a latitude and longitude that would have placed the vessel less than 1,000 miles from the coast of Africa and 360 miles south of the Azores. This route would be followed by a vessel bound from the Mediterranean to the Panama Canal, but would have placed the ship far to the west of the area where the submarines of Spanish insurgent Gen. Franco have been operating, and far to the east of the area where the United States fleet is engaged in war games.

So mysteriuos were the letters "PECC," which are not now assigned to any vessel, that a wide range of conjecture was stirred among United States Navy, Coast Guard and commercial communications and shipping officials. One speculation was that the call, if genuine, sought to hide the true colors and destination of the distressed vessel.

United States Navy officials reported the letters " PECC" ordinarily would be assigned to a Dutch vessel, but that if the letters following the "P" were further advanced in the alphabet than "ECC" a vessel of Italian or Spanish registry might be involved.

As late as 1936 the letters were used as the code designation of the 10,000-ton Dutch steamer Flandria, but in that same year the vessel was sold to a French firm and now is known as the Bretagne, with the call letters "FNSB." The vessel was listed most recently as tied up at St. Nazaire, France.

An amateur radio operator in Buffalo, N. Y., Melvin Botto, reported the letters were listed in an amateur call book magazine for another vessel by the name of Flandria, a 103-foot trawler of Netherlands registry. This 159-ton boat was so small, however, that commercial communiciations officials expressed doubt that she carried any wireless equipment.

The radio marine station here first picked up the SOS in a message from the American freighter Tulsa, which sailed from Germany earlier this month for United States ports. Later the same message, a little more complete and giving a slightly different position, was relayed from a London station which said it had picked up the SOS direct.

Italy Denies Clash

Rome, Feb. 22 (AP).—Italian officials today denied reports of a clash in Tunisia.

While some diplomats expect Premier Mussolini to take a step toward crystallization of colonial demands on France after the coronation of a new Pope and the end of the Spanish war, they said they did not expect it to take the form of armed conflict.

Rumors that German troops had been sent to Libya were believed by diplomats to have started from reports that young Nazis had been sent to Ethiopia and Italian Somaliland for training in colonial administration.

Germany was reported to have taken that step in expectation that she would eventually regain some of the African colonies she lost in the World War.

Such reports, circulated privately for more than a month, stressed that German troops were not involved.

A government news broadcaster said the visit to Libya of Marshal Pietro Bodoglio, Italian chief of staff, was to open a fair at Tripoli.

French Expect British to Join Bow to Franco

'Unconditional' Recognition Expected Saturday by Both

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Feb. 22.—Unconditional French and British recognition of the Spanish insurgent government of Gen. Franco was declared today to be "probable" by Saturday.

Senator Leon Berard, semiofficial French envoy to Burgos who made the declaration at St. Jean-de-Luz, planned to return to the Spanish nationalist capital tomorrow for a "decisive" conference with Gen. Count Francisco Gomez Jordana, nationalist foreign minister.

The British representative, Sir Robert M. Hodgson, already was in Burgos.

Britain and France both have indicated that the recognition talks will concern only the acceptability to Franco of the diplomats London and Paris propose to send to Burgos as ambassadors. The two powers were represented as having capitulated before Franco's refusal to withdraw foreign soldiers or promise leniency for Spanish government leaders at the end of the war as conditions of recognition.

Rome, Feb. 22 (AP).—Premier Mussolini told Gen. Franco of Spain today that "Italian legionnaires are at your orders until final victory."

Il Duce telegraphed his assurance to Franco in acknowledgment of greetings from the insurgent leader on the occasion of a big military review in Barcelona, former government capital.

Franco messaged Mussolini that "the Spanish people acclaimed Italy and her Duce," and Il Duce replied "I return your greetings with great cordiality, confirming that the Italian legionnaires are at your orders until final victory."

Germans Set Up Balloon Network To Trap Planes

Berlin, Feb. 22 (AP).—A network of balloons on cables in close rows to trap attacking airplanes has been added to the antiaircraft protection of German cities and industrial regions.

Enough balloons are now on hand, first reports of the new defense system said today, to surround all of Germany's more vital industrial regions. The first unit was set up for possible use during the Czecho-Slovak crisis last September, when the Leuna artificial gasoline factory near Leipzig was outfitted with a balloon blockade.

The British originated the balloon defense scheme.

Austria's Gold 'Missing' Since Anschluss

Experts Here Hold 80 Million Was Lost By Unfavorable Trade

Government experts expressed belief yesterday Germany had lost to foreign countries, largely because of an unfavorable trade balance, the $80,000,000 of gold and foreign exchange seized when Austria was annexed last March.

At the same time, due to the Nazi policy of juggling financial figures, it is said, loss of the money has been concealed from the German public.

The money represented the gold reserve and foreign exchange holdings of the Bank of Austria. Since the anschluss occurred, no trace of it has since appeared in published figures of the Reichsbank. Likewise, loss of additional funds has not been revealed.

Losses Since Anschluss

The enlarged Germany has gone in the red, so far as its trade balance is concerned, in each month since Austria was annexed. This is due in large degree to the fact that Austria has consistently had an adverse trade balance.

But this does not tell the whole story, trade specialists pointed out. An unfavorable trade balance is meaningless if offset by other factors in the balance of payments between a nation and its neighbors.

In the old Austria, money spent by tourists largely offset the money paid out to foreign countries for imported necessities. Since the German anexation, the Austrian tourist trade has dwindled, forcing Germany to draw on its cash reserves to take care of Austrian import needs.

"War Chest" Believed

The tourist trade of Sudetenland, once noted for its watering places, also is expected to show the effect of German annexation. Thus the international antipathy toward Nazi policy has added to the economic problems taken over with new territory.

Germany, it is generally conceded, has a "war chest" of gold. The amount is believed to be comparatively small. But by refusing to reveal the actual amount of gold holdings, it keeps the world and its own people in the dark as to the size of its cash reserves.

The Reichsbank for many months has shown gold and foreign exchange holdings of about $31,000,000. The figure has not varied, except that, beginning September 30, its published foreign exchange holdings increased by about $400,000.

Japan Asks More Control Of Foreigners

Pressure Tightened Against Shanghai's International Area

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, Feb. 22.—Japanese armed forces tightened their pressure against Shanghai's foreign-controlled areas today by using the terrorism that has swept those areas as a basis for demanding a greater voice in the administration of the International Settlement.

United States Marines were subject to emergency call, a common practice, but Marine officers denied leaves had been canceled.

Japanese marines took over a part of the Italian defense sector in the northwest corner of the city.

Japanese said the action was the result of an agreement with Italian officials and was designed to suppress shootings and robberies that occur regularly in the district.

Council Rules Area

The International Settlement is administered by an annually elected council, now comprising five Britons, two Americans, five Chinese and two Japanese.

Eight Japanese officials called upon Cornell S. Franklin, American chairman of the council, with a "request for the council's assent to the adoption of effective measures to cope with the present situation."

(Japanese Foreign Minister Arita instructed Consul General Yoshiaki Miura to present a virtual ultimatum to the council demanding that the terrorism be stopped immediately. The Tokyo newspaper, Asahi, said Japan demanded the prompt arrest of terrorists, greater representation on the council, and reorganization of the International Settlement.)

Little Resistance Forseen

Foreign observers believed that if the Japanese should send troops into the Settlement little resistance would be encountered from the comparatively small foreign defense forces. These forces include approximately 1,200 United States Marines, 1,400 Britons, and an undisclosed number of French colonial troops and Italians, besides the Shanghai volunteer corps and the foreign, Sikh and Chinese police.

Forty-three refugees from Kuling, including eight Americans, were officially reported tonight to have been brought safely through Chinese and Japanese lines to Kiukiang, Yangtze River port. They had been marooned for months by the Chinese-Japanese conflict.

Information here indicated there had been 65 foreigners at Kuling, including 12 Americans.

Allies of Arabs Agree to Confer With Jews

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 22.—The British government partly broke the Arab boycott of the Jews at the Palestine conference here by arranging today for Iraq and Egyptian representatives to meet with the Jews in a round-table meeting tomorrow.

Palestine Arabs still refused to sit with the Jews, but it was understood Colonial Secretary MacDonald had convinced the others that they should come together to discuss the "compromise British plan" for settling the Palestine dispute.

The plan was reported to call for a compromise to limit Jewish immigration in the Holy Land. The Arabs oppose any Jewish immigration.

Hungary to Sign Axis Pact Friday

Budapest, Feb. 22 (AP).—The foreign office announced tonight that Hungary would sign the anti-Comintern pact Friday, with Foreign Minister Count Stephen Csaky attaching his name to the agreement at a ceremonious meeting with the ministers of Italy, Germany and Japan.

Hungary accepted an invitation to join the pact on January 13, but "diplomatic technicalities" have delayed formal signing.

Guam Harbor Debated

All day in the House, debate raged over proposed harbor improvements and airplane facilities in Guam, located in the western Pacific, flanked by Japanese mandated islands and 1,300 miles from Japan itself. The dozen other proposed air and submarine bases in the mid-Pacific, in the Caribbean, in Alaskan waters and on the continental coasts came in for little discussion.

Hardly had the House started reading the bill for amendments, before Representative Sutphin (Democrat), of New Jersey, offered the motion to strike Guam from the bill. By previous agreement, this amendment was permitted to go over until today, and the House proceeded to approve other major features of the bill.

As Republican lines broke on the Guam issue, Representative Maas, of Minnesota, a World War aviator, led those minority members supporting all features of the Administration's bill.

"Ready to Meet All Comers"

"I take it as a fundamental American doctrine that we want the world to know that we intend to defend every inch of American soil anywhere, at anytime, from anybody," Maas said.

Maas said that if America seeks to demonstrate to the world that Democracy can survive "then we must make it clear to the dictators or any other form of government, whether communistic or otherwise, that we are ready to meet all comers at any time with our own borders kept inviolate." Maas said that "once you start a policy of appeasement you never stop. Once you give an inch you have to give a mile. Once they get you on the run you never stop—and we'd better not start."

Opposition within Democratic ranks to the Guam item was led by Representative Shannon, of Missouri, who filed the minority report in the House Naval Committee, opposing the authorization.

Viewing minor improvements on the island as the first step by the Navy toward fortification, Shannon said the United States would lose no time to prevent such a threat to its safety if Japan followed the same course on an island near the United States.

Predicts War With Japan

Shannon predicted the United States "sooner or later" will find itself in a war with Japan "over possession of the Philippines." He said the rich but defenseless islands would be "a liability rather than an asset" in event of war in the Orient, and declared no international agreement of any kind will swerve Japan "in its unalterable determination to ravish the Orient and establish unchallenged Japanese supremacy in the Far East."

Among other speakers:

Representative Mott (Republican), of Oregon, warned that this country may one day be forced to fight Japan, as well as Germany and Italy, and should build an "impregnable" defense line in the Pacific.

Representative Youngdahl (Republican), of Minnesota, said the United States' "Eastern frontier is not the Rhine, and the Western frontier is not at Guam."

Representative Thorkelson (Republican), of Montana, said Japan did not ask this country's permission when she destroyed American property in China.

Representative Sirovich (Democrat), of New York, charged Japan has fortified mandated islands from which American citizens are barred.

Representative Ditter (Republican), of Pennsylvania, said "there is something more sinister in this than rivers and harbors development."

Representative Bolles (Republican), of Wisconsin—"Guam is a little island entirely surrounded by Japan. . . . Before the question came up House members thought that Guam was, like Boston—a state of mind."

Warners Now Open But One Show With Flag Display

Patriots who have been complaining that showing of the American flag on local movie screens while the "Star-Spangled Banner" is played tends to cheapen the national air have been met halfway by the Warner Brother Theaters' which now display the flag at one performance a day instead of the three formerly given.

Army officers were chief complainants, according to theater ushers. They objected that while the banner was displayed at the finish of 8:30 p. m. performances, whole crowds got up and left the theater with no thought of standing at attention, while those coming in for the 9 o'clock show were too engrossed looking for seats to note the flag.

So now although 18 neighborhood theaters of the District chain still open their first performances with the "Star-Spangled Banner" they permit their audiences to remain seated thereafter till it's time to leave.

First Aid in Homes Is Topic Tonight Of G. U. Forum

The health essay contest for which two 4-year college scholarships are being offered for the best written essays, will close March 17. Georgetown and Dunbarton College, respectively, are offering a scholarship to the boy and girl submitting the best essay on either of the two subjects, "The Prevention of Communicable Diseases" and "The Value of Vitamins in the Diet."

World Premiere Slated For RKO-Keith's Theater

'Spirit of Culver' Gets First Showing Here; So What About 'Yes, My Darling Daughter?' News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

RKO-Keith's Theater, following the current run of "Gunga Din"—going into its fourth consecutive week—will celebrate another world premiere according to announcement made yesterday by Manager Hardie Meakin.

BELL

Instead of the projected presentation of W. C. Fields, Edgar Bergen, Charlie McCarthy—in blackface for the first time—Mortimer Snurd, et al., which was to have followed "Gunga Din" on Fifteenth street, it now has been arranged to screen "The Spirit of Culver" for the first time publicly on Thursday night, March 2. This readjustment of bookings was brought about by the realization on the part of Universal Pictures and RKO theater executives of the timeliness and present importance of a film which depicts in convincing and engrossing fashion just what a young boy's American birthright means to him. It has a strong bearing on the topic of American Democracy and the value of American citizenship, following a groove that has been well worn by patriotic playwrights in the theater—both living and cinematic—this year.

The leading roles in "The Spirit of Culver" are played by Jackie Cooper and Freddie Bartholomew, with Andy Devine and Henry Hull leading the support.

The making of this picture must have come pretty close to the heart of Freddie Bartholomew. When he made his fleeting visit to the Capital some months ago and was accompanied back to Baltimore by the local drama desks, both he and his Aunt Cissie expressed their determination to become American citizens. Since Freddie is a minor and his aunt his legal guardian, this becomes a matter that principally concerns Miss Millicent Bartholomew. Her naturalization papers, one is given to believe, already are what the studios know as "in work." It also is highly appropriate that this type of picture should have its world premiere in the Capital of the Nation at just this time, when so much governmental interest centers in both Americanism and un-Americanism.

A Holiday Brings Back Memories

Unless a memory that is none too retentive of dates is as far off as usual, it was 32 years ago yesterday, Washington's Birthday, 1907, that this column, as a mere child in arms, attended both the matinee and night performances of Pixley and Luders' "The Prince of Pilsen," at the Columbia Theater. The late Marcus Loew had not as yet come along to establish the Columbia as Washington's first "de luxe" motion picture palace and it was dividing the Klaw and Erlanger "syndicate" bookings with the late William Harryman Rapley's National.

We had a fairly good seat for that matinee performance and liked the musical comedy so well that on the way out we purchased the same one for the same night. We liked the night performance even better than we had the matinee. What a score that piece had! Every song number was a hit and many of them endure to this day, although many of the present generation probably have no inkling of their origin.

A bit of evidence in support of this contention might be adduced from the fact that "The Message of the Violet" was incorporated in the Jeanette MacDonald-Nelson Eddy singing sequences of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of "Sweethearts." Dorothy Parker and Alan Campbell, who contrived that film story—just as they did that of "Trade Winds"—must have pretty good memories, on their own accounts.

Slightly bewildered by the New York ban of "Yes, My Darling Daughter," in film form, after the play had run on Broadway for months on end, the local drama desks, come Monday, will have an opportunity to discover what the hubbub is all about. The Warner executives are previewing the picture on that date. There was what this departmnet always deemed a sinister note in the original play and we have been upbraided vigorously from some quarters for ever having said so in print. Just what has happened to it in the new medium we soon will find out. A report will be rendered in due course.

Emil Jannings to Be Seen Again

A picture never before seen in Washington will be offered by the Film Society of Washington in Pierce Hall on Wednesday night, March 1. This will be "The Making of a King," in which Emil Jannings appears as Wilhelm I, of Prussia. The story is said to be historically accurate and the dialogue unusually clear.

It is interesting to recall that Emil Jannings was introduced to American film audiences in support of Pola Negri in "Passion," her first American-released picture. "Passion" was the story of Du-Barry and was directed in Germany by Ernst Lubitsch. First National secured the American rights and distributed the work in this country with huge artistic and monetary success. It was this subject that led to the Hollywood engagements of Negri, Jannings and Lubitsch. And the greatest of these was, and is, Lubitsch.

Fifty-Fifty Note

I may have been wrong about its being spring, but I was right about the "flareback!"

Black Harmony

The celebrated Hall Johnson Choir of negro singers accompanies Maxine Sullivan, dusky swingstress, in an arrangement of "St. Louis Blues" in picture of the same title, featuring Dorothy Lamour and Lloyd Nolan.

Little

Flying the house flag at the Little Theater, "Ballerina" glides into its fourth consecutive week at the Ninth street cinema. This is the first time any film has played that theater for four straight weeks.

Not only filled with exquisite music and dancing sequences, "Ballerina" also unfolds a poignant story of childhood drama behind the scenes of the Paris Opera. Acted entirely by students and stars of the Academie National de Musique et de Danse, "Ballerina" was directed by Jean Benoit-Levy, who produced the somewhat familiar "La Maternelle," which related the story of children in a neighboring faubourg of Paris.

Mia Slavenska, premiere danseuse of the Ballet Russe, and Yvette Chauvire, of the Opera, are the leading dancers and characters. Between them stands Janine Charrat as the wistful adolescent student who springs a trap door, crippling a ballerina for life in a futile effort to help her favorite. The music is from Gounod and Chopin and is played by the orchestra of the Paris Opera.

A Beachcomber and a Missionary

CHARLES LAUGHTON AND ELSA LANCHESTER
out of character, but, nevertheless, the two gifted players who portray the stellar roles in "The Beachcomber," returning to the downtown screen at the Warner Brothers' Metropolitan Theater tomorrow. Their characterizations in this picture are among the best they have brought to the cinema

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 22.—A famous astrologist lost her best star client because the key in her typewriter broke out in a rash. The key wrote that "Sex governs your life." Should have been "Six." Bet the typewriter knew!

HEDDA HOPPER

Talked with Affable, intelligent Merle Potter, head of the Minneapolis Journal, who three years ago started the annual poll for the best performances and pictures of the year. This year, 1,021 newspaper critics selected the winners: Bette Davis, Spencer Tracy and Snow White. It hurts Hollywood's pride to fall in line instead of originate, but they're agreeing with the critics, a different story than in years past.

Mr. Potter refuses to go to any of our previews while here. He says, "I just like to get the feel of Hollywood. I'll see all the pictures back home." The experiment cost him time, money and patience but he claims it's been worth it because his readers are among the most avid fans in the whole country. I really think the academy should give him an award.

Kansas moved in yesterday when Lieut. Gov. Carl Friend and Senator Jesse Denious, also a publisher, presented a scroll to Warner's signed by 10,000 citizens asking for the premiere of "Dodge City" as a feature of their frontier days celebration. I've been invited, for no good reason and am trying to line up my work so I can go.

A year ago Grace Hayes couldn't get a job. Fourteen weeks ago she pawned the jewels, and on the proceeds, a matter of $8,000, opened the Grace Hayes Lodge. Last night she celebrated the burning of the mortgage and the signing of a long-term contract at Metro. She's to be teamed with Wally Beery and in her first picture plays the mother of Mickey Rooney in "Babes in Arms."

Bruce Manning, ace scenarist and poet who does the Deanna Durbin stories, has an Irish accent. Which wouldn't be funny, except—he was born here, in the South. The other day Pasternak asked a friend, "Why does he talk with that Irish accent? Is it from reading the Irish poets?" "No, I don't think so," replied his friend. "Guess it's from kissing the Blarney Stein."

They couldn't find an actor in Hollywood who would admit knowing how to operate a jute loom required for "Each Dawn I Die." Seems that's a trade frequently learned in prison. So one of the mechanics who installed it put on make-up and now he's an actor.

Wonder which one of our producers will be smart enough to sign up Laurette Taylor and remake "Outward Bound?" Hope they won't overlook Cecelia Loftus—she's wonderful.

Tickets are selling like hot cakes for gorgeous Korjus, who will sing with our symphony orchestra.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Feb. 22.

". . . and I'm worried, dear . . . Well, the nurse went to the Music Hall last week, and she said she saw children—the same size as our George—playing piano and doing acrobatic stunts . . . Oh, well. Maybe he's not so clever. Maybe it's just like you said, that he takes after you."

12 P. M.: "How much am I bid for this original manuscript of Thomas Wolfe's 'Look Homeward Angel.'" Justice William Harmon Black, for the League of American Writers, auctions at Delmonico's . . . "I'll start with $50," volunteers Belle Green, representing the J. P. Morgan Library . . . $750," another bids . . . "Gosh," protests the Morgan agent, "we're not Rockefellers" . . . The FCC has rejected LaGuardia's application for an all-night license for WNYC," a radio official informs at the Cotton Club. "In the meantime, the city station has arranged facsimile broadcasts for the fire and sanitation departments." . . . "Yes, we're going to stay here and become American citizens," the Abbey Theater stars—Barry Fitzgerald and his brother, Arthur Shields, who fought in the Easter Rebellion—confide at the Tavern . . . "Shields is quitting 'Spring Meeting,'" their companion informs. "When he was sick at home he heard that another actor got sick, too. So Arthur returned to replace this man. He's quitting because they docked him for the two days he was out."

1 A. M.: Tallulah Bankhead calls Orson Welles to her table at the Stork Club and introduces him to Dorothy Parker . . . "This," sighs Dorothy, "is like meeting God—without dying" . . . "There are four of us here, and we're forming a new political party," Mrs. Tone, Franchot's mother, tells Prof. David McWhite at Tony's . . . "Why not?" a listener advises. "After all, Hitler started with six men, in a beer hall, too" . . . "Corey Ford met Maxie Rosenbloom in Hollywood," a scenarist reports at the Game Cock, and Maxie said, "I used to be a fighter until I got polish and became an actor." "Don't bother to explain," Corey told him. "These are tough times for anyone to keep straight."

2 A. M.: "No, you must not permit any of these girls to meet you." Max Machon, the trainer, warns Max Schmeling at the Paradise . . . "Max just got a $5,000 refund from the tax department," an associate relates. "He's taking it back to Germany. After all, if he leaves it here—and Hitler learns of it—he'd be suspected of anti-Nazi action" . . . "Frances William completes her routine at Jack Osterman's Little Club, seats herself at a ringside table—and is surprised to find, at the next table, Les Clark, her former husband, with his current wife . . . At the Pennsylvania, Mary Dooley, Ben Bernie's vocalist, sings "Swanee" in minor key. She is followed by a guest-artist, who sings the same song—a perfect rendition. The lady is Yvette Rugel—mother of Mary Dooley.

3 A. M.: "The big scene in Selznick's new Carole Lombard picture, 'Made for Each Other,' is about a child getting pneumonia, and the plane flights, etc., to bring the serum," a film official reports at Leon & Eddie's. "Well, that picture was based on Myron Selznick's pneumonia—because that all really happened in his case" . . . Peggy Joyce presents a $100 prize check to the handsomest-man contest winner at El Morocco—James Burke, jr., a junior at N. Y. U. . . . "This," Peggy confesses, is the first time I've given a man some money."

4 A. M.: Rudy Vallee and Barbara Brewster of the Brewster Twins gaze into each other's eyes amorously, oblivious of the rhumba music, to which they dance in waltz time . . . "Dewey's office is investigating the election practices of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co." a municipal officer advises at the Rainbow Room. "Some of the company's agents will be brought before the grand jury on Thursday."

5 A. M.: Tom Girdler, the steel-man, sits in Reuben's, in the booth next to the TAC group who had just completed performing "Priscilla Picket-Line," whose feature line is "Girdler quivers just like jello, when he hears Priscilla bellow" . . . "Which reminds me," states Jack Rosenberg, head of the local Musicians Union, "if any foreign country sends a band here to play for the World's Fair, we won't let 'em play, unless they pay the same number of American musicians stand-by prices. That's what they do to us, in their countries" . . . "I just saw H. H. Rogers, jr., at the Kit Kat," a reporter states at Dave's Blue Room. "He complained his yacht has been damaged for the third time this year. He's yelling Sabotage" . . . "Samuel Seabury is in for a surprise, when the briefs are filed in the insurance case he's defending," a legalite informs at Lindy's. "His opposing counsel will quote, in their support, from Court of Appeals decisions rendered by Seabury, when he was a member of the court."

6 A. M.: ". . . and it's quite all right now . . . We don't have to worry about the baby . . . I checked the Music Hall records . . . Those weren't babies who performed there last week . . . Those were people the nurse never has seen before . . . Yes, midgets."

Arts Club

Any play endowed with a character yclept Victoria, Dowager Duchess of Doncaster, is bound to be dominated by that figure. Especially when she is played by Maud Howell Smith, as was the case last night, at the Arts Club, when "The Member For Merton," an original play by Ednah Proctor Clarke, was presented in the clubrooms.

Holy Deadlock and the political fortunes of an 800-year-old family, whose latest scion marries an American woman, are its concern. The matriarch of the family objects to progress in any form and is shocked when it seems likely that the seat for Merton might go out of the family. But the American divorcee is not so shallow a figure as our dowager leads herself to believe. The figure of the old lady is always amusing—old ladies generally are—and the American wife also has moments of interest. Mrs. Smith was completely at ease and won the chuckles of the audience. Caroline McKinley was the American and was generally credible.

The others in the cast included Robert Prescott Hall, William S. Hepner, Constance Ely, Frank Kemon, Edith Strickland, James Otis Porter, William T. Jarvis, Harold Allen, Maurice Jarvis, James Carroll Hicks and Harold Allen Long.

Mystery and Comedy Mark The New Films

Next Week in Theaters Will Be Dedicated To Lighter Moods

"Trade Winds," co-starring Fredric March and Joan Bennett, will open at the Palace Theater this morning. This is the film in which Miss Bennett makes a unique turnabout by becoming a brunette. Her well-known blonde tresses are sacrificed in her dash to escape from the police, who are out to convict her of murder. The chase, with Mr. March as the hound, becomes a globe-trot before it is over, with authentic settings in Honolulu, Japan, China, Ceylon, Singapore and Bombay. And Sothern has a comedy part as March's worldly-wise secretary and Ralph Bellamy plays a Doctor Watson to the March Sherlock. The dialogue and screen play were written by Dorothy Parker and Alan Campbell and the direction is by Tay Garnett.

"There's That Woman Again," another romantic mystery-comedy, will bring Melvyn Douglas and Virginia Bruce to the screen of the Earle Theater tomorrow morning. The film concerns the further adventures of Detective Steve Reardon and his beautiful, light-headed wife whose first cinematic adventures were in "There's Always a Woman." The two become embroiled in a jewel robbery and a case or two of murder. Margaret Lindsay and Stanley Ridges are among the suspects. On the Earle stage, Eddy Duchin and his orchestra will present some of the songs and arrangements which have made them radio favorites of long standing. Needless to note, Duchin will have some numbers of his own at the piano besides presenting a group of specialty entertainers including Lew Sherwood, trumpeter; Durelle Alexander, singer; Johnny MacAfee, singing cowboy; Ray and Trent, with their "Twisted Nonsense;" Burton Pierce, Stanley Worth and The Top Hatters.

Completing the trio of new films which make this a light-hearted week on local screens, the Capitol Theater tomorrow morning will present "Topper Takes a Trip," another sequel. Thorne Smith's famous "Topper" took such a hold on last season's public that the gay ghosts, whose "ectoplasm" empowers them to appear and disappear at will, are back in further hilarity on the French Riviera. Constance Bennett is the fun-loving spirit and most of her associates are old friends from the earlier "Topper," Roland Young, Billie Burke and Alan Mowbray. Phil Regan and Benny Meroff are the two headliners on the Capitol stage for the new week. Regan, the popular film players who became a tenor after he had been a New York "cop," will sing some songs of the day and Meroff will offer his band, a versatile bunch of musicians who mix comedy, acrobatics and juggling with their music. Hank Rose, Roy Richards, Don Tanner, Shirley Rust and Martha Perry are some of Meroff's performers.

For a fourth week "Gunga Din" will hold the fort at RKO-Keith's Theater. This depicts the rough-and-tumble adventures of three sergeants in the service of her majesty's army in India. Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen and Douglas Fairbanks, jr., are the trio and other leading parts are portrayed by Sam Jaffe, Eduardo Ciannelli, Montagu Love, Robert Coote, Abner Biberman and Joan Fontaine.

Charles Laughton and Elsa Lanchester, his wife, play the leading roles in "The Beachcomber," which begins its second week downtown at the Metropolitan Theater tomorrow morning. This is the celluloid version of W. Somerset Maugham's story, "Vessel of Wrath." Laughton is a drunken reprobate on one of the islands of the Dutch Indies and Miss Lanchester is the sanctimonious missionary who comes to bring salvation to the natives and eventually gets saved herself. It is a comedy with slyly refreshing touches of wit.

"Jesse James" returns to F street and the Columbia Theater tomorrow morning after two weeks at the Palace Theater. Tyrone Power has the role of the famous bandit and Henry Fonda plays his brother. Frank, Nancy Kelly and Randolph Scott are also leading figures in this narrative of an earlier practitioner of train robberies and bank holdups. Henry Hull, Slim Summerville, J. Edward Bromberg, Brian Donlevy, John Carradine, Donald Meek, John Russell and Jane Darwell are others in this Technicolor action film.

Maurice Chevalier after an absence of some 40 years, will return to the screen of the Belasco Theater on Saturday afternoon in the French-made "With a Smile." The popular Parisian, whose smile is as well remembered as his voice, has the role of a penniless young man who comes to Paris to make his fortune which, with the Chevalier advantages, should be a cinch. From one of his musicals at the Moulin Rouge he brings songs in the vein in which he has for so long been a master.

A camera's eye view of the White House is the subject of one of the leading shorts at the Trans-Lux Theater on the new schedule beginning tomorrow morning; "Inside the White House" is its title. A visit to Chartres Cathedral, the glorious French gem of the Middle Ages, where the sound track picks up the choir's singing of Gounod's "Ave Maria;" how the newsreels are made ready for the screen, and a Walt Disney cartoon, "Lonesome Ghosts," are three other shorts at the home of the newsreel on Fourteenth street.

"Valerie Parks and Her Own Big Show" is the new attraction at the Gayety Theater, opening on Sunday afternoon. Besides the noted burlesque star, others at the Ninth Street theater will include Harry Levan and Billy Reide. Patricia Joy is one of the display artists and Beebee Sherman will sing. The usual large company of dancers and singers will also be on hand.

The Washington Civic Theater will present Saki's "The Watched Pot" on next Wednesday evening at the Wardman Park Theater. Saki (H. H. Munro) is particularly famed for his short pieces and "The Watched Pot" is his single full-length play. In the cast of local players will be Anne Ives, Mannix Walker, Lansing Hall, Mary Jo Day, Natalie Core, Betty Seibert, Allan Squire, Charles Grunwell, Joe Bourne, Kenneth Banghart and Robert Langley.

In A Good Cause

It is ironic, as one Government official is reported to have said, that the Federal Housing Administration should have been singled out for discipline by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The FHA is not one of those prodigal agencies spending irresponsibly in the confident hope that Congress will respond to requests for deficiency appropriations. Its shortage of funds to meet wage and salary payments is due to an expansion of business under the new housing act, for which Congress failed to make adequate financial provision.

The FHA, realizing last year that its funds would not suffice, consulted Acting Budget Director Bell. Following his advice, the housing authorities decided to defer application for a deficiency appropriation and meantime spent as needed instead of apportioning funds as required by law to make them last throughout the fiscal year.

Viewed in isolation, the method of procedure followed appears to have been entirely rational, especially as it would have been difficult to determine in advance the effect of the housing amendments upon the volume of FHA business. Nevertheless, if the director of the budget were to make a practice of advising Government spending agencies to disregard legal restrictions designed to keep them within the limits of budgeted appropriations, Congress might as well abandon any pretense of keeping a hand on the public purse strings.

Under a reorganization of the executive establishment, so long overdue, arrangements might be made for conferring greater powers of current control over the expenditure of funds upon the head of the Budget Bureau. At present, however, as pointed out by the reorganization committee, the Bureau of the Budget "has largely failed to develop any supervision over the execution of the budget, particularly supervision embodying administrative control over expenditures."

No doubt the worst that will happen to the FHA employes will be a possible slight delay in payment of their salaries. That is unfortunate but the innocent victims should take comfort from the thought that they are suffering in a good cause. Unless Congress takes a stiff attitude toward deficiency appropriations, budget plans are hardly worth the paper they are written on.

A Two-Edged Weapon

Dorothy Thompson, having attended the Bund meeting in New York, yesterday addressed her column to those who believe in American principles "passionately and with intolerance toward any counterbelief." And, doubtless affected by what must have been a nauseating spectacle, she asserted that the country "has need of men and women who will serve its principles with the uncompromising spirit of some of its enemies."

There is more than a little danger that Miss Thompson's advice may be misinterpreted in a way which would do far more to damage than to preserve the fundamental American principles which she sees endangered. To advocate intolerance is a very risky business, for there is no human characteristic which is easier to arouse. And there is none which is harder to control when it is aroused.

A further trouble with even a qualified doctrine of intolerance is that in this country it might very readily be directed along lines which would startle Miss Thompson painfully. There is no unanimity among Americans as to what constitutes un-American doctrine. There are many wholly patriotic citizens who regard Communists as the spawn of the devil; who think sit-down strikers should at least be jailed; who observe the New Deal with abhorrence; who believe alien agitators should be deported, and so on. Pandora's box would be nothing to the troubles released if the precept of "intolerance toward any counterbelief" once obtained real headway here.

The greatest possible disaster for America would be to fight totalitarian principles by adopting Nazi or Communist methods. And this is the more true because there is not the slightest need for such a surrender of real American doctrine. The Bund meeting in New York was essentially ridiculous. The Communist meeting scheduled in the same hall next week will be the same. Not passion but intelligent ridicule will destroy the influence of these equally absurd manifestations, which incidentally are far more representative of New York than of America as a whole.

Perhaps the most fundamental American characteristics are the national sense of humor and the national sense of proportion. On these attributes, in the last analysis, the success of our democracy depends. And a sense of proportion tells us that the worst way to confront the Nazi threat is to register passion or fright over such fundamentally idiotic and self-defeating performances as that staged by the Bund in New York "in honor of George Washington."

The Cost Of Defense

During the fiscal year beginning April 1, Great Britain proposes to spend the immense sum of $2,726,000,000 upon armaments. The cost is to be covered in part by taxes but chiefly from the proceeds of loans. In preparation for this heavy drain, the House of Commons has authorized the government to borrow up to $3,760,000,000 to help finance the five-year defense program, thereby doubling the amount of the present authorization. Nevertheless Prime Minister Chamberlain hints strongly that a further increase in loans may be necessary at an early date.

Thus Great Britain, definitely abandoning attempts to maintain a balanced budget, is preparing next year to borrow a sum estimated by experts to be far in excess of the total volume of annual savings accumulated there for investment purposes. However, with demands for new capital for industrial purposes below normal and with an abundance of idle funds on hand, conditions are generally favorable to government borrowing. Furthermore, Great Britain, like other countries, can, if need be, finance her extraordinary outlays by resort to inflationary borrowing after the fashion of our own Government.

It does not inevitably follow, as we know from experience, that these practices lead to immediate advances in prices and other disturbances once associated in the public mind with chronic deficit financing. The British can doubtless add a good many more billions to their already huge national debt without risking a collapse of credit. For the modern state has control of many devices for concealing the real costs and hence minimizing the danger of uncovered and nonproductive forms of public spending. In fact, the first result of an accelerated spending program for defense will be to give an added stimulus to industries ministering directly and indirectly to the defense needs of the country.

The actual cost of defense is concealed by these superficial and ephemeral gains. It is neither visible nor subject to exact determination, because it consists largely in the loss of potential wealth and social benefits that result when a nation's savings are constructively employed.

Necessary as the defense outlays have come to be, it would be a mistake to underrate the strain which they involve. The tax burden, national and local combined, borne by the British is already heavier per person than that in this country, while the British wage and income level is much lower. Consequently, it is easy to understand why the government is unwilling to impose new taxes, preferring to rely upon the seductive device of deficit financing.

To add to the seriousness of the situation, the British are embarking upon their peacetime borrowing operations with a national debt roughly equivalent to that of our Federal Government, although the population of the United Kingdom is only about one-third that of the United States. It is well to remember that public debts created for nonproductive purposes add to the future burdens of taxpayers, and divert an increasing proportion of income to holders of the government's promises to pay.

It is only by considering the long-time effects of heavy borrowing upon the distribution of income that we can gain some idea of the real cost of a type of program such as that now reluctantly undertaken by Great Britain. It is an even greater cost—that much can be said with certainty—than the actual figures of expenditure indicate.

Still Functioning

One by one during the last few years the political activities of the League of Nations have withered away. No one now regards the Geneva organization as an agency capable of preventing war or punishing an aggressor.

But the League continues to exist and to function. What were at the outset wrongly regarded as somewhat secondary and subsidiary activities now occupy the center of the Geneva stage. The League today is almost wholly an agency of international co-operation in technical and nonpolitical fields. That very circumstance has tended to bring Washington closer to Geneva.

This country never accepted the far-reaching obligations of the League Covenant. But since 1924 we have increasingly co-operated with League committees in their economic, social and scientific undertakings. The Department of State is thus indorsing no new departure in pledging the League continued support in its humanitarian and technical work. Certainly there can be no disputing the statement that the United States Government "regards each sound step forward in these fields as a step toward the establishment of that national and international order which it believes is essential to real peace."

Some day the League may regain the place it once occupied as a real instrument of peace preservation. At the moment that day appears far off. The present eclipse may last a long time. But when the situation is again propitious for the development of international order, the fact that Geneva kept functioning through the storm will be important.

Caught In The Quagmire

In view of the fact that the fall of Canton took place no less than four months ago and virtually without a struggle, it would seem that Japan has had more than sufficient time to consolidate her hold not only on the South China metropolis but on all of the surrounding territory as well.

Tuesday's aerial attack on the Canton-Hongkong railroad, at the point where the line enters the British leased territory of Kowloon, belies any such assumption. It constitutes, on the contrary, a virtual Japanese admission that the war in South China, far from being over, has begun to flare up anew. Chinese guerrilla bands appear to be giving the invaders far more trouble in that region than they ever encountered from regular Chinese armies.

But why attack the railroad? The presumption must be that over this road war supplies from the outside world are reaching anti-Japanese elements in South China and enabling them to continue the fight against the invaders. Once again, therefore, the Japanese find it necessary, as they did almost daily in the months before the capture of Canton, to bombard the road linking South China with the outside world by way of Hongkong and Kowloon. It is, possibly, only an incidental circumstance that the Japanese fliers overstepped the line and dropped bombs in what is British territory.

In the meantime, while the attainment of Japanese military objectives is being frustrated by Chinese guerrilla activity, the island empire faces at least equal difficulties in achieving her political goals in China. It has been Japan's hope that in Shanghai, and elsewhere in conquered territory, puppet governments could be established capable of serving as a front for the island empire. That hope has not been realized. Practically no outstanding Chinese leader has agreed to become identified with any of these dummy regimes while those obscure politicians who, for one reason or another, have agreed to play Japan's game are in constant danger of assassination.

This circumstance recently led to a demand in the lower house of the Japanese Parliament for the extension of Japanese authority to those parts of Shanghai not already under Japanese control, principally the International Settlement. Advocating such a course, the leader of one of Japan's two principal parties has warned the government that the failure to suppress Chinese "terrorism" in Shanghai may jeopardize the success of Japan's whole policy in China. He, therefore, advocates that the Japanese army take the most rigorous measures regardless of legal complexities and foreign susceptibilities.

At a time when some of the Western powers, notably the United States and Great Britain, are stiffening their resistance to Japan's pretensions of overlordship in China, the advocacy of such action is the counsel of despair. But with her goal in China constantly receding and with bankruptcy a more likely result of the undeclared war than victory, the possibility that Japan may invade the International Settlement at Shanghai can not be ruled out. Caught in the quagmire, Japan's struggle to release herself daily grows more intense. But that action has thus far served only to drag her in deeper.

Twinkle Toes

The average man usually finds the feminine ensemble eye-filling, but the picture he sees invariably lacks detail. He can never tell his wife what any woman wore.

But once in a great while he gets a kick in the shins and will forthwith take notice. Today, for instance, the glass of fashion reflects a lovely lady coming up in the world on inordinately high heels and sticking her fantastic toe out like nobody's business. Such an occasion is always worthy of comment; and quite unconsciously he somewhat jeeringly couches it in feminine language. My dear! That floating chiffon hostess gown is a perfect picture. (He remembers in his ribald youth calling something of the kind a carpet sweeper.)

And then inevitably Sir John Suckling's words recur: "Her feet beneath her petticoat like little mice stole in and out." Petticoats are in again, his wife informs him; but he is thinking of other things. "What's the matter with your shoe?" he demands. "Your toe's sticking out."

"Naturally," says she. "It's the latest thing."

"Ah," says he. "A concession to the stocking manufacturers since you are no longer showing your knees."

"Fish have no means of communication," declares a naturalist. Perhaps that's the reason why they never respond to lines we drop them.

"Insects will soon control the world," declares a scientist. Then, why don't we stop electing them to office?

Baltimore Streetcars

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

A story appeared in your issue of January 9, supposedly satiric and facetious, under the caption, "Cities of America," subhead, "III—Baltimore: Archeological Study."

Quoting the writer: "There are chronicles which tell of 'blue lines,' 'green lines,' 'white lines,' but . . . nobody could possibly make out where any of them went to. The truth of the matter is they all went to the same place."

As a matter of fact there were no blue, or green, or white "lines." There was a Red Line (Gay street), a White Line (Madison avenue), a Blue Line (Charles street), and a Green Line (Pennsylvania avenue), collectively known as the Baltimore City Passenger Railway Co., presided over by former Gov. Oden Bowie (Maryland), paying a tidy 12 per cent annual dividend and mostly unpatronized by its stockholders—because they rode around in carriages.

Last sentence in above quotation is a masterpiece in the art of exaggerated poetic license and should cause Baron Munchausen to blush. The Red Line began at Gay street and North avenue (the latter the then northern boundary line of the city and officially known as Boundary avenue) and terminated at the western end of Baltimore street; the White Line began within a block of the Madison avenue entrance to Druid Hill Park and ended in South Broadway, within a block of the water; the Blue Line began at Charles street and Lafayette avenue and ended at Camden Station; and the Green Line began on Pennsylvania avenue above North avenue and ended at President Street Station (later, I think, being extended to Canton and Highlandtown). Each and all of these lines traversed a part of Baltimore street, leaving it at four separate points.

If anyone, no matter how unfamiliar with Baltimore he may be, even in the wildest flight of imagination, can conceive how the termini of these four lines, beginning and ending miles apart, "all went to the same place," it is beyond my limited mental equipment by exactly the same mileage. H. W. W.

The Anderson Episode

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your editorial in Tuesday's paper is a disheartening example of a device used for many years to justify discrimination, namely, the interposition of petty issues between a fact and the great issue it throws into bold relief.

Marian Anderson is admittedly a singer of such rare excellence that no person of culture in Washington can afford to miss her at any time. The objective is to find, by whatever means, a suitable place for Washingtonians to hear her. And yet, as a stumbling block, you throw such comparatively trivial matters as her fee, the privateness of organizations like the D. A. R., and the dual school system. Are any or all of these as important to Washington as the performance of an artist whom Toscanini calls the world's greatest singer? If so, our cultural standards are low indeed.

Two things stand out pre-eminently in this episode. First, no matter what "justifiable" excuses are offered, Washington culture is a puny thing to the outside world when Marian Anderson can be excluded for any cause. Second, the Negro people of Washington are squarely behind those of us who challenge this discrimination, to the bitter end; and they are encouraged that, seeing as they do hundreds of their white friends in the ranks beside them, this is one battle against discrimination they will not have to fight alone.

JOHN LOVELL, Jr.

Washington, Feb. 21.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is particularly fortunate that the Marian Anderson exclusion incident should have occurred at this precise time and place, since it had to happen. All of us should be everlastingly grateful to the D. A. R. for barring her from Constitution Hall, and to the Board of Education for denying her the use of a local high school auditorium.

We should be deeply thankful to these two stalwart champions of democracy for bursting the bubble of racial equality and freedom that we Americans have so suddenly assumed since Hitler's campaign against the Jewish people. Without the help of the daughters and the school board we might have gone on sprouting wings and growing halos. It's nice to be jerked back to realities.

VICTOR R. DALY.

Washington, Feb. 20.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your editorial, "The Anderson Episode," in this morning's Post reaches a new and amazing low in the base business of apologizing for racial intolerance.

The Daughters of the American Revolution have denied the use of its tax-exempted Constitution Hall to Marian Anderson for exactly the same reason that Hitler's storm troopers would bar Jascha Heifetz from a Berlin auditorium—racial intolerance. The Board of Education, a public body, has upheld this stupid discrimination in denying the use of the Central High School Auditorium to Miss Anderson.

This racial discrimination is so obvious that to apologize for it, to try to explain it away, is sheer hypocrisy.

HENRY LEE MOON.

Washington, Feb. 21.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your spineless editorial apology for the action of Constitution Hall and the District of Columbia Board of Education in connection with the Marian Anderson recital scored 100 per cent in missing every vital point involved.

First, you apologize for the board on the basis of the honorarium involved without accounting for the difference between an honorarium at any price at Armstrong High School and one at Central High School.

Second, you apologize for the Daughters of the American Revolution on the basis of their rights as a private organization without taking their claims for tax exemption into consideration.

Of course, there is no argument against your contention that Washington needs a public auditorium—but the fact is at the moment that Washington doesn't have one, and the problem now confronted most specifically deals with the availability of present facilities.

There is a good excuse for most actions, and technical reasons are always called into service in situations of this kind. Those who are sincere in their desire to convert Washington from a hotbed of sectional prejudice to a capital representative of the great democracy we advertise it to be in the totalitarian states will not hide the real issues behind technical obscurities. They will face them squarely for what they are worth.

Although a public auditorium available to all groups would be a valuable asset in this community, it would not obscure the fact that Washington, D. C., the Capital of the United States, is one of the ugliest warts on the face of democracy.

Asks Political Realignment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In Mark Sullivan's column appearing in The Post for February 18, I was attracted by the heading "Political Strategy" and was very much touched by Mr. Sullivan's concern over the possibilities that Mr. Roosevelt, by such actions as the appointment of Thomas R. Amlie to the Interstate Commerce Commission, may alienate enough conservative Democrats from the party to assure defeat in 1940.

I think Mr. Sullivan should calm his fears with the reflection that, if the Democratic Party should be dominated by such men as Vice President Garner, Senators Glass, Byrd, George and most of the other Southern Senators and Representatives, the Wall Street bankers, the industrial tycoons and other oppressors and exploiters of the poor would be just as safe as they would be under Republican rule, as the political philosophies of the Southern Democrats and the Northern Republicans are exactly the same.

I fail to see what difference it would make to the people Mr. Sullivan represents which party is in power so long as the control of the Democratic Party was in the hands of Southern politicians, who on account of poll tax and other suffrage restrictions, need give no thought to the votes of poor people and working men.

So if we are going to have two parties, I favor having all Republicans in the Republican Party and all Democrats in the Democratic Party so men like Senators Glass and Byrd could be prevented from obtaining office under false pretenses and would be compelled to run as Republicans.

"Is Holland Next?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Where did The Post get that article "Is Holland Next?" in last Sunday's issue? It was ascribed to a German, an "Aryan," and a voluntary exile. The article is well written and has no brogue in it; but it has an awful lot of rotten law and rotten psychology in it. Or is it merely "literary matter," paid for at so much a column?

"Rumors have been current in most European capitals" that Holland is the next item on Hitler's list, with the object of getting hold of the Dutch colonial empire. A picture of the actual procedure is sketched. A long discussion is given as to how much Germany could get away with, just as a gang of robbers might plan how much it could seize before being forced to hold off. Even blackmail is hinted at.

In the writer's mind, apparently, there do not exist any concepts of law, right, justice or order—nothing but getting what is wanted by the cheapest possible means, any means. This sort of talk and those who are spreading it are only fit for banishment to St. Helena or some equally effective disposal, and it is safe to say that they will get it sooner than they think.

O'Mahoney For The Court

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I read with interest Mr. Lindley's discussion of Supreme Court possibilities. He mentioned but did not linger on the name of Senator O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, one of the ablest younger men in the Senate.

Senator O'Mahoney is scholarly, a good lawyer, a man of high character, eloquent and modest. He is progressive in his voting record. He is a Westerner and a Catholic of Irish descent. I think he should be included among the most eligible.

The Post Impressionist

Fifth Zone

PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, at 3 a. m., can look nearly as spacious as Maj. L'Enfant must have planned. When I stepped out from the sheltering doorway of the drug store at Fourteenth street to hail a cab speeding down the far side of the avenue, the driver described a magnificent arc across the empty thoroughfare, bore down on me at 35 miles an hour and brought the rear door handle to rest within six inches of my extended hand.

After I gave the address the driver said, "What's it like outside?"

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"Well, is it cold or hot or what?" he said, a little irritably. Anybody must know it's cold, I thought. "Plenty cold," I told him, fairly irritable myself, by that time.

But as we drove out Connecticut avenue, all the windows rolled up and radio and heater both running at capacity, I sensed something of the isolation of the man behind the wheel, the detachment which gives the Capital's 3,500 cab drivers their undisputed pre-eminence among the critics of manners and morals.

Too often we associate cab drivers only with pungent observations on the ability of the Washington ball club's pitching staff or the whims of race horses. Their penetrating political analysis and the breadth of their scholarship and philosophy deserve to be better known.

Take the driver who ran me up to the Library of Congress the other day. He opened his monologue without delay.

"Boy, this town is full of Democrats," he said. That seemed a noncontroversial overture, and I assented readily. But then, with no warning whatever, he unburdened himself of a most profane and uncompromising denunciation of the Democrats and all their works. There might have been a Democrat in the back seat, for all he knew, but he persisted in his expose until we were even with the Supreme Court Building.

Our journey so nearly ended, he apparently felt the time had come to reveal the foundations of his political philosophy. Last winter, it seems, he had driven a lady home from a White House reception.

"I buck that line of cars for 15 minutes so I can get into position and pick up a fare. This old gal steps in and gives some address 'way out past Nebraska avenue. We got there and—whaddya think—she hasn't got any money with her. All right, I say, I'll wait while she gets some inside the house. Out she comes a minute later and says there isn't any money inside either. She takes my address and says she'll send it to me. Did she ever do it? Of course not."

As I tipped him, I wondered whether he took me for a Republican, Democrat or Anarchist. He seemed relatively indifferent to our little transaction, however, his thoughts returning to the monstrous occurrence of last winter. "That never would have happened when Hoover was in the White House," he concluded.

The driver who took two of us to the National Symphony the same night was very businesslike. While we were still a mile away from Constitution Hall he asked which side of the house my tickets were on. I said I didn't know, and he returned to diligent gum-chewing. Meanwhile, in the back seat, I happened to use the expression, "i.e."

"Just what does that stand for?" the girl asked. It was in the late 1920's that I last studied Latin. I fumbled around for a few seconds, but the closest I could come was "idem est."

The driver said nothing then, and the conversation moved into other channels, but when we were stopped by the traffic lights at Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, he turned around and told the girl, "That phrase you were asking about is "Id est." He didn't look at me at all.

I knew there was going to be a collision, just a mild one, as my cab nudged into the stream of noonday traffic at New Hampshire avenue and S street. The driver declined to look to the left at all and betrayed no emotion when we were jarred into a dead stop, bumpers athwart the running board of a laundry truck. He stepped out and held a curiously unanimated conversation with the other driver, returning in silence to resume our journey.

We had gone on several blocks before he shifted his weight and said, "If a saint were put on a street corner and 1,000 or 10,000 people passed, the saint would acquire all the qualities of those people."

Apparently taking my failure to reply as a sign I didn't see his meaning, he put the proposition another way: "If a sanctified person were immobilized he would take on all the vices and characteristics of the people he came in contact with."

I still couldn't think of anything to say, but he didn't seem to mind. We were down to E street before he spoke again. "You know I'm not usually a heavy drinker," he confided. "But since I started shoving this cab around 12 hours a day . . ." I expected some horrid revelation. "Now I take a glass of wine early every morning and, quite often, another in the evening."

I began to feel I could use a glass of wine myself, even at high noon.

Free Press And License

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Discussing "A Free Press and Fair Play," in The Washington Post, February 20, Dorothy Thompson finds:

"When free speech and a free press allow themselves the license to slander, libel, malign, distort and villify, they are on the way out."

Don't misunderstand. It is "free speech and free press," mind you, that are on their way out.

This has needed saying so emphatically and over so long a time that it falls into the category of "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick."

The sooner this vulgar license, parading under the banner of "free speech and free press," makes its exit, the better for the Nation. Yet, unless this be soon, the entire framework of democracy will be shattered about our heads.

Then the totalitarians will explode with such mirth that Mr. Goebbels will be relieved of his efforts at proving the German people have a sense of humor.

Superb Police Control

IT WAS interesting to watch the Communist riot leaders perform in the crowds around Madison Square Garden during the meeting of Hitler's anti-Americans.

The Communists themselves hold meetings of exactly the same kind, but this was Hitler's night to howl, so they turned out to picket, as they say. Picketing is their preparation for rioting, but they failed because the police were superb and the crowds were, in the main, impartial. A little resentful against both camps the crowds may have been and disgusted because their country must endure brawling between foreign armies or give up its own freedom. The Americans had no clear way to express themselves, but it was possible to catch remarks from noncombatants who stood in doorways out of the swirl and others who were caught in the scuffle on their way to the theaters, or just out for the air as usual.

In Forty-eighth street a chant began, "We demand the right to picket." A few voices at first, then a few more, and presently perhaps as many as 50. The horse cops let them yell until the riot leaders began to press the crowd toward Eighth avenue, and the garden. At a certain point the police moved against them, firmly but without tempers, and those in front had to give way. That started pressure toward the rear, and there was some bumping and stumbling as the people ran. A riot leader in a leather jacket ran a short way with the rest, then sensed the pressure had eased and pulled up.

LIKE A QUARTERBACK in a huddle, he passed the word, "the workers demand the right to the streets. Everybody yell, 'the workers demand the right to the streets.' Come on, now." And then, in a loud voice, "the workers demand the right to the streets." A few voices, including some women's voices, took it up, "the workers demand the right to the streets," and the tide set in against the cops once more.

The police were elastic. They let them advance a little, then moved them back. Occasionally they would let through a truck or taxi which, with horn squawking, would cut a swath. The police seemed to be thinking of the danger of a stampede and a miniature Guadalajara in New York; for each repulse was executed with restraint. If they had really charged, the people in the rear, and women everywhere in the crowd, might have been trodden down like Mussolini's invincible black shirts in their immortal advance to the rear in Spain.

The news pictures of these things, although authentic, give an exaggerated idea of the ferocity of the struggle. If you poke a policeman and he can reach you to poke you back, you probably will go down. Some people fall just from losing their footing in a mass movement. That happens in football crowds sometimes, and a couple of customers actually were trampled to death in a minor Guadalajara at a ball game a few years ago as the crowd in the bleachers scurried to escape a summer shower.

Bystanders Beap Brunt of Mixups

THE COMMUNIST riot leaders affect the leather or cloth zipper-jacket and hatlessness. That is their uniform. An overcoat would encumber a riot leader in running away after promoting a fatal mixup. His mission is only to start the riot, to cue off his squad on their various chants and rushes.

The innocent bystanders, or the rank and file in the forward rows, then take the bullets or the blows of the nightstick if the police are undisciplined and panicky, like the Chicago cops at the steel mill. The riot leader then is able to report a successful action with so many dead and so many wounded at the hands of capitalist brutality. They have an unlimited number of lives of innocent bystanders and rank-and-filers to sacrifice for such victories.

The police of New York receive little credit for their efficiency and composure under conditions that would goad undisciplined men to bloody reprisals. Here they stood between the Communists and the German Bolsheviks, protecting each from the other. The Communists knew that if the police should withdraw abruptly and say, "All right, you want to fight the Nazis, so help yourself," there would be terrible disorder, with killing on both sides.

THEY DIDN'T WANT to fight the Nazis, and they relied on the police to keep them apart. But still they booed the cops and yelled about their rights under a Constitution which they and Hitler's Bolsheviks both are trying to destroy. They lie down in the streets, they kick, bite and sometimes spit in the faces of decent American cops, but if a cop slams one with his fist or stick, that is police brutality again.

The jamming and shouting around the meeting of Hitler's Bolsheviks on American soil were not general in the crowd. The disorder was directed by Communist riot leaders with skeleton mobs at their command in the mistaken belief that the throngs of Americans casually on the streets as usual, or drawn to the region by curiosity, would fill in the gaps and take the beatings and bullets.

But the Americans kept their shirts on, so the riot flopped. Somebody is going to catch hell from Moscow about this.

Japan Digs In

Her Reconstruction Problem In China

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Tokyo.

ALTHOUGH JAPAN'S military conquest of the Republic of China is still far from complete, Japan is already embarking upon the much more difficult task of the political and economic construction of the New China envisaged by the Tokyo government. Plans already set in motion go even further, and contemplate the erection of a Far Eastern economic, cultural and even political bloc composed of the three nations of Japan, Manchukuo and the New China.

The twin slogans of "Long-Term Hostilities" and "Long-Term Endurance" are being replaced by "Long-Term Reconstruction." It is recognized that not until the Chiang Kai-shek regime has been entirely wiped out, either by the sword or by its capitulation to Japanese demands, this proposed reconstruction of China and construction of a new order in the Far East cannot be successfully accomplished, but the powers that be in Tokyo see no need why a start should not be made immediately. Such a start has been made.

Japanese troops are still battling Chinese in more than one section of that land and the generalissimo is still undefeated. He has lost the entire coastline, North China, the republic's principal cities and a sizable block of the hinterland, but territorially the bulk of China is still in Chinese hands. Acute observers on the spot say that Chiang can hold out indefinitely, that he has been driven into that section of the nation most easily defended from the strategic standpoint, that his supplies of arms and munitions are adequate for a long period to come, and that he has the unwavering loyalty of the men serving under him.

He is estimated to have at least a million men under arms, many of them the best soldiers in China, and millions more upon whom he can draw for replacements as the need arises. He would be a rash prophet indeed who would say that Chiang will be defeated before the year ends, but equally rash to predict just when this unofficial war will end. The case of strife-torn Spain cannot be overlooked.

Political Progress Almost Negligible

CERTAINLY the Tokyo government and the Japanese army fully realize this situation, but they are quite as much convinced that the time has come not only to consolidate their military gains but to start constructive work in that part of China now in their hands, to proceed parallel with the destructive work of warfare in other parts of China.

Politically no great progress has so far been made. It is true that a provisional government has been set up in North China, another in central China and a third may soon be expected in south China. These temporary governments are without substantial power, however, and until this is gained and the three or more such governments consolidated into a single, efficient unit with which Tokyo can treat, the occupied Chinese territory must remain in political chaos save for such stability as is afforded by the presence of what amounts to Japanese garrisons.

Just how this is to be done and who are to be the leaders of this New China government remain for the future to disclose, or, rather, to develop. In the meantime, Tokyo is going forward with such material as lies to hand, poor though it may be. The heads of the North and central China governments and Prince Teh of Inner Mongolia have all visited Tokyo, where they have been feted and lavishly entertained, but if any progress toward unification has been made the secret is being carefully guarded. With Japanese troops in occupation of the soil, however, this will be a comparatively easy nut to crack.

The real problem is that of finance and economic development, and this is Japan's chief goal, save for the strategic one of blocking the Soviet Union from outflanking Japan in the event of a second Russo-Japanese War.

Japan was and is almost perfectly equipped for the military conquest of much of China, but is she as well equipped for the industrial, agricultural and commercial development of the territory now under her control? From the very beginning of the present hostilities on July 7, 1937, this writer has insisted that the economic phase of the Sino-Japanese conflict was fully as important—if not more so—than the military. The latter was a foregone conclusion insofar as coastal and near-coastal China were concerned; not so the former. Japan has already proved to the world her worth on the field of battle; it remains for her to prove the same in the field of peaceful economic development.

Japanese Capital Inadequate To Aims

A NORTH CHINA development company has been formed in Japan with its shares fully subscribed (it is not known how much is actually paid up), and similar companies will be launched in accordance with necessities. A new currency has been introduced and Japan is trying to force it into circulation. Japanese industry and business, which were withdrawn from China 18 months ago, are rushing back to their old stamping grounds in a big way, and new Japanese firms are springing up there with mushroom-like growth. But all of this, in itself, is not enough.

Huge sums of money will be required to carry out Japan's ambitious plans for the development of China and for making of that country an economic complement to Japan proper, and whence is this money to come? Japan is weathering the war well in a financial way, but she simply does not possess the capital required for her future plans. Neither of her two semi-allies, Germany and Italy, is able to supply it, and it may be questioned whether they would do so even if able. After all, there are only two great money markets in the world today—New York and London.

Are America and Great Britain willing to finance Japan in the development of resources which would mean a direct loss to themselves in trade and commerce? They have not been willing to do so in the case of Manchukuo. They have heard Japan repeatedly pledge herself to protect the rights and interests of third parties in China, and at the same time they have seen those rights and interests suffer as the Japanese armies advanced farther and farther. It may well be that Japan means to respect their rights and interests once the war is ended, but nothing is more timid than capital, and it can scarcely be expected to expose itself to what seem unnecessary risks. There is ample room for American and British investment elsewhere than in China.

When Tokyo says that it welcomes co-operation in the development of China, the thought arises that what Japan means is she welcomes foreign capital, either in the form of loans or of investment, but not in the management of the proposed development. That will scarcely appeal to foreign financiers.

Moreover a Central China organ has been created in Tokyo to deal with all affairs Chinese, and the key positions in this organization are held by Japanese Army and Navy men. With all due respect to Japanese military leaders, they are not regarded as the best economists in the world.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Watchman, What Of The Night?

ALTHOUGH it will seem to many like foolish optimism, my own view is that the world has very probably already passed the most critical point of danger. Hard as it is to see one's own time in its true historic perspective, I, nevertheless, believe that the period of extreme danger, the danger of a world war or of the ignominious collapse of the democracies, was in the three months from about September 1 to about December 1, that is to say from the beginning of the panic that led to Munich until the failure of the general strike in France.

Those were the most dangerous days through which we have lived since the World War. During that period Great Britain and France were weak and divided and demoralized, whereas Germany, Italy and Japan were at the peak of their military power and prestige. But approximately since December the situation has, I think, changed fundamentally for the better.

The situation in the autumn may be described as one in which Germany, Italy and Japan had succeeded in mobilizing for war purposes their whole strength. Great Britain and France, on the other hand, were still on a peace basis, having come nowhere near mobilizing their immense reserves.

Mobilization Limit Reached by Dictators

THE GREAT FACT in the present situation is that Germany, Italy and Japan have mobilized all their reserves, and have, therefore, reached the limit of their military development. In the matter of training troops and officers the German army can still be strengthened, but in all other essentials the German war machine is now just about as big as the available resources and man power permit it to become.

The outward evidence for this is to be found in what Hitler and other German leaders are now saying; the objective evidence is to be found in the undisputed official statistics which show that the reserves of man power, of materials and of capital are now in use.

That there is a shortage of labor we know, because the Third Reich is being compelled to resort to the conscription of labor. That there is a shortage of materials we know, because of the desperate devices that are being used to get hold of them by barter arrangements. That there is a shortage of capital we know, because the economic advance by the Nazis into central Europe and the Balkans has proved to be very much less successful than appeared probable after Munich. It is less successful because the Nazis simply do not have the capital needed to develop and exploit the undeveloped resources of eastern Europe.

Given a situation in which all the reserves of labor, materials and capital are fully employed, any attempt to expand further, or even to maintain armaments at their present level, must inevitably lead to the expropriation of the well-to-do and the rich, or to an inflationary rise of prices, which would mean suffering for large masses of the people. The resignation of Dr. Schacht was the outward evidence that Germany had reached the point where it had to choose either to expropriate, or to inflate, or to reduce armaments, or to risk a world war.

War Is No Longer A Good Gamble

WE DO NOT KNOW which of these choices Hitler will make. What we do know is that they are all dangerous to him and that for him war is the most dangerous of all. That does not mean that he will not in any circumstances chance war. But it does mean that war is no longer, as it was in the autumn, a good gamble for him. It has become a desperate gamble.

It has become a desperate gamble for a number of reasons. In the first place, he would have to take the offensive against the Anglo-French alliance, that is to say against the best navy and the best army in Europe. His only ally would be Italy and Italy is extremely vulnerable.

Second, German and Italian morale cannot be depended upon in a long war in which it is necessary to take the offensive, or be strangled by the blockade.

Third, once Germany goes to war, the whole people is armed and the real rulers of Germany are not the Nazi politicians but the army leaders.

Fourth, British and French morale, once it has nerved itself to withstand the shock of the first air raids, would almost surely be very high as long as the people were obviously fighting to repel invasion.

Fifth, the British and French are now unmistakably on the way to mobilizing their huge but hitherto unused reserves.

Sixth, an offensive war initiated by aerial bombardment of London and Paris would, as Mr. Hoover pointed out in his recent speech, create a public opinion that would make anything like the existing neutrality law unenforceable. Under these circumstances, the reserves available to Britain and France would destroy any real chance of an ultimate German victory. No one knows this better than the radical Nazis and that is why they are so furious at the United States and at the President.

Purely Defensive Policy Advocated

IF THIS IS the real situation, the practical conclusion to be drawn from it is quite simple and clear. It is to keep cool, to be confident, to speak quietly, and resolutely and firmly to proceed with the armament programs in Great Britain, in France, and in the United States. War is not in the least inevitable. War is not even probable provided it is made clear that no one is organizing a crusade to impose democracy on Germany and that no one of the democracies will fail to defend itself if it is attacked.

A purely defensive policy is not only the one which fits morally the ideals of all free peoples; it is also, as a matter of diplomacy and military strategy, the soundest and strongest policy. If the situation in Europe, particularly inside Germany, is what it appears to be, then the defensive policy—the policy of armaments without hysteria and without any entangling commitments, the diplomatic policy of non-intervention in Germany's, China's or Spain's internal affairs, the policy of emphasizing the virtues of freedom rather than the vices of tyranny—is best calculated to save mankind from the catastrophe of another world war. And in averting a world war the liberties of men will more surely be preserved and restored than by any other conceivable method.

The supreme fact in these days is that a world war has probably been averted, can almost surely be averted. It will not be averted by becoming frightened into provocation nor by being frightened into cowardice. It can be averted, it is being averted, by being calm, by being confident and by being resolute.

Republican Foresight

By Mark Sullivan

For National Good

ON THE BROAD question that now most interests America—armament, foreign affairs, neutrality—two clarifying developments have emerged. They are not only clarifying, but reassuring.

When President Roosevelt sent his armament proposal to Congress, the Republicans took a cool and prudent step. They, through their leader, Mr. Joseph W. Martin, jr., set up a committee to study the armament proposal. The committee, headed by Congressman James W. Wadsworth, of New York, went about its task thoughtfully. They held several meetings, and called in Republican national leaders for counsel. In the end they formulated a report which in large degree supported the President's recommendation.

On this detail of our national problem the Republicans forebore partisanship, forebore expediency. They also forebore negligence. They went to work. They studied the problem as conscientiously as if it were they who had the responsibility. Thus studying it, wholly from the standpoint of national interest, they arrived at a position not greatly differing from the President's.

Then, when a question arose about the President's action in facilitating the sale of airplanes by private manufacturers to France, the Republicans did much the same. They, with the rest of Congress, investigated. They sought light. After all the facts had been brought out, the Republicans, through their spokesmen, announced that they were in substantial agreement with what the President had done.

Future Actions Of G. O. P. Reflected

THIS LINE of action by the Republicans is important, not because it is any generous gesture of support of the President, but because it is the expression of Republican Party conviction. This line of action by the Republicans is important for another reason. It reflects the spirit in which the Republicans take up the responsibility put upon them by their increased representation in Congress. It reflects the spirit in which presumably Republicans will act if it should happen next year that their party should be given responsibility for the administration of the country.

It is a method which faces the country's problems as the country's problems, not as material for party controversy. It is a method of detached, thoughtful survey, to arrive at what is wise. Just this method is called for by the entire group of problems before the country. If the Republicans come into power they will accept the fact that much of what the Roosevelt Administration has done is good and ought to remain. An example is the regulation of securities and exchanges. They will accept the fact that even as to unwise innovations—such as several of Mr. Roosevelt's monetary measures—some of them cannot be undone overnight and must remain for a time. They will accept the fact that some innovations—such as social security, for example—must be gone through with a sharp but careful knife, preserving the principle, dismissing that part of the mechanism which is bad, saving the rest and making the whole workable.

Must Take Position On Foreign Relations

A PROBLEM which is immediate, which cannot wait until when and if the Republicans come into power, is foreign relations. It is going to be necessary for the Republicans to take a position with respect to foreign relations, and to take it soon. About foreign relations, it is hardly likely the Republicans should arrive at a conclusion as near to support of the President as they did in the cases of armament and of the President's action about airplanes for France. The country does not know, and probably Mr. Roosevelt himself does not know, in full, what is to be his attitude on all the important phases of foreign relations.

In his address to Congress there was what seemed to be a suggestion broader than the Republicans would be likely to support. Some sentences in his address seemed to suggest that America should embrace the side of democracy wherever democracy seems to be attacked by authoritarian government. That, if the President has it in mind, is farther than America is likely to go. We went into one war "to make the world safe for democracy" and have not cherished the aftertaste.

French Objectives Of No Interest Here

FRANCE as a democracy we should like to see survive. It is to our interest that democracy should survive everywhere. But France as a country has objectives which have nothing to do with democracy. France as a country just now has an acute issue with Italy about 300 square miles of land in Africa. Whether that bit of land goes to France or to Italy has no bearing on our interest in the question of democracy versus authoritarian government. America has no interest in who possesses some 17 miles square of a territory called by a name most Americans never heard of, Somali, lying on a bit of water few Americans ever heard of either, Bab-el-Mandeb. If that episode is what caused Mr. Roosevelt to say he might have to shorten his vacation, he need not hurry back.

Paying The Bill

By Barnet Nover

British Diplomacy And Rearmament

OF THE MAJOR powers, Great Britain is the only one which, during these last years, has pursued the path of financial orthodoxy. She alone, since 1932, has been able to boast of an even nominally balanced budget. And she is the only one whose public debt has remained fairly stationary.

Other governments have succumbed to the temptation to finance part of their needs through continuous borrowing. The British government has avoided that temptation. It has pursued a pay-as-you-go policy as heroic as it has been successful.

The path which Great Britain has followed has not been an easy one. It has made it necessary for successive governments to keep taxes at a drastic level while keeping expenditures down to the level of receipts, even though this meant a limitation of wholly desirable social welfare endeavors approved in theory, by government and opposition alike.

BETWEEN 1931 and 1937 the British chancellor of the exchequer was Neville Chamberlain. His was the responsibility for keeping the financial ship of state on even keel. But it is the same Neville Chamberlain, now premier, who for the second time since 1937, has given the "go" signal for a new program of governmental borrowing, the ultimate extent of which no man can foresee. In the face of rising needs of national defense, orthodoxy is being thrown overboard. The vast sums needed to pay for the present defense establishments and for new warships, new planes, more tanks and antiaircraft artillery, improved air-raid defenses, etc., are not to come out of current governmental income. The money is to be borrowed. The British national debt which practically stood still from the end of the war until last year is now to be increased. Mars must be paid.

Chamberlain Held Purse Strings Tight

THERE CAN be no quarrel with the British government's intention, cost what it may, not to be left behindhand in the present arms race. To do so would be fatal. And so well is the situation understood that only five votes were registered in the negative when the House of Commons was polled on the question of doubling the government's borrowing capacity to 800,000,000 pounds.

Indeed, the very circumstance that a man who for six years was the bulldog of the British treasury is now the very one to demand that the bars be let down on government borrowing, shows how pressing is Britain's need. But in so doing Mr. Chamberlain implicitly admits the failure of his government's policy in the field of foreign relations.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN himself has been prime minister only two of the seven and a half years since the present cycle of international disturbances began. But he and his party have been associated with every government that has held office in Great Britain throughout this period.

It was the present chancellor of the exchequer, Sir John Simon, whose lackadaisical attitude toward Japan's aggression in Manchuria, played a real part in the collapse of the League's effort to chastise that aggressor. The present coalition of Conservatives, National Liberals and National Laborites was also in power during the Ethiopian fiasco, at the time when Germany smashed the Locarno treaty, during the rape of Austria, Fascist intervention in Spain and the dismemberment of Czecho-Slovakia.

IT CAN hardly be said that in those seven and a half years the same realism, courage and determination displayed by British statesmen in the financial field was equally displayed in the field of foreign relations. The contrary was the case. British foreign policy during these years has been marked by wishful thinking, indecision and pusillanimity. And the result has been disastrous.

But the disaster has not been alone with respect to Britain's external interests, which today are more seriously threatened than at any time since the World War. British domestic interests are threatened as well. For the British cannot view with the slightest equanimity the prospect that the national debt load is now to be increased.

Britain's and U. S. Debts Compared

DESPITE THE tremendous efforts made by a succession of chancellors of the exchequer, the British debt, while kept from growing, was never pruned down to any degree after the World War. And that debt has been tremendous, amounting to around $37,000,000,000, or $84 for every man, woman and child in the kingdom. That compares, of course, with the present American public debt of around $39,000,000,000. But our population is thrice that of the United Kingdom and our resources are far greater than that nation's.

The hope in Great Britain is, of course, that this tremendous and unprecedented expenditure for arms will prove only temporarily necessary; that the British rearmament program by its very size and impressiveness will help to intimidate the would-be aggressors into quiescence; and that, before too long, a new effort in the direction of disarmament can be made.

Others besides Englishmen will fervently pray that these hopes are fulfilled. But it should be apparent from the events of the past few years that piling up armaments is not enough. Britain's $7,500,000,000 rearmament program, which the London government now finds it necessary to supplement, did not prevent the disastrous developments of the past two years. What is needed is a firm and coherent foreign policy of which any rearmament program can only be one expression. Until such a policy is put into force rearmament can have relatively little value of and by itself.

THERE IS an obvious lesson in Britain's experience for us. There are many people in this country, too, who, during the past years have regarded domestic developments as in one hermetically-sealed compartment and foreign affairs as in another. Actually, they are all interrelated. The most courageous and far-seeing domestic program may prove of only temporary value unless it is accompanied by an equally courageous and far-seeing foreign policy.

It would be wonderful if we could blandly ignore events taking place abroad and, as the saying goes, tend solely to our own knitting. Unhappily, this is out of the question. World problems are by the unhappy force of necessity our problems, too. To ignore this fact is to court disaster.

House Cheers as Rep. Martin Blasts Bund as Subversive

The German-American Bund movement in general and the recent meeting in New York in particular yesterday were assailed in the House as a "sworn mission to destroy Americanism" by Representative Martin (Democrat), of Colorado.

Martin, a leader of the House liberal bloc, called participants in the Madison Square Garden meeting "traitors" to America and declared: "They have no more conception of democracy than if no such political philosophy existed."

"Shades of Washington," shouted Martin, amid House applause, "must such things be tolerated in the name of liberty on the free soil of America? God save America from Nazi Christian Americanism."

Hawks Assails Reds

Later, Representative Hawks (Republican), of Wisconsin, rose to criticize Martin for not attacking nazilsm and communism alike. Hawks charged the Communist issue is deliberately being shoved into the background by "radical" members, and declared the $5,000,000 authorized for Guam in the Navy base bill should be turned over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation for investigation of all subversive movements.

"Why is communism being put in the background all of a sudden?" said Hawks. "Why have all of the radical members who formerly were pacifists now turned to support of the defense program?"

Meantime, Berlin dispatches quoted the National Zeitung as suggesting that a rupture in diplomatic relations between Germany and the United States would be the next step in the present strained relations between the two countries.

A New York dispatch in the German newspaper said "many believed that relations between the United States and Germany have reached the lowest possible point, and that the next step will be a rupture of diplomatic and commercial relations. Many believe that Roosevelt has this step in mind."

Chairman Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs Committee, now handling the new Navy base bill, was a target of the Nazi official news agency, D. N. B., in comment on his House speech assailing dictator nations. A Washington dispatch of the agency said "the greatest idiocy and injustice, of which Vinson speaks, will be found in that country where there is pain in body and soul and hopeless unemployment. That, however, is not in the so-called dictator states."

The Diplomatische Politische Korrepondenz, semiofficial organ of the German foreign office, called the United States the "chief disturber of world peace today."

"Minions of Dictator"

Representative Martin, in his House speech, said "men of the blood and fealty of the hired Hessions of the revolution" attended the German-American bund demonstration in New York three nights ago. Martin said it was "a mass demonstration of aliens, many of them wearing the military uniform of a foreign dictator, the greatest enemy in the world of everything that George Washington stood for, and of everything America typifies."

"When I saw the picture of these uniformed and swaggering minions of an alien dictator on the pages of the morning papers and read what they said," the Colorado Democrat said, "I felt that if I had the power not one of them would be breathing the free air of America in 24 hours.

"A man would have to pinch himself to see if he was awake and in the United States. They cheered the names of misguided Americans who are lending aid and comfort to Nazilsm and they jeered and booed the President of the United States and every spokesman of democracy who has incurred the wrath of Berlin.

"I had rather my name remained forever unknown than to have it acclaimed by such a gathering. If these misguided men who are giving aid and comfort to the enemy were in Berlin and pursued the same attitude toward nazilsm that they do toward their own Government they would be in concentration camps or decorating stone walls."

Nothing could be more convincing of your good fashion judgment than to put yourself in stripes this spring. Especially nicely regimented ones like those in the navy and white rayon suit, above. Clever manipulation of verticals and horizontals and slimming kick pleats produce a litheness of silhouette.

Check and double check shepherds plaid for your tailored wardrobe. It is staging its biggest style check-up since 1914, when everyone wore brazenly checked suits. The three piece, right, combines sky blue and black checks for tweed cardigan jacket and topcoat with solid blue for the skirt.

Lanvin created the original of this tucked-in blouse, which has the preciseness of a full dress shirt. The artful French coutourier reversed the tucks to simulate a yoke which terminates in a minute hand-stitched collar. Down-the-back buttons, long, easy sleeves and a bright new color—California orange—are other Lanvin notes.

In Waltz Time

Graceful Lace

Serenely confident of her loveliness is the woman who fuses lace and chiffon into a dinner gown of ageless charm. Shadowy silk lace is shirred and softly draped to form the bodice and wrist-tight sleeves of this ladylike gown. The chiffon skirt, in identical pastel tone of the lace, flares like a great accordion.

Orchids On His Budget

The sweetheart decolletage of this quaint "party frock" seems to have been made to receive the heart-shaped corsage, above. The swain would be heartless indeed if he couldn't afford orchids on his budget for this type of romantic gown. It is a low waisted black point d'esprit with sweeping circular skirt and dropped shoulder line.

A sentimental story is told by the romantic waltz-time fashions pictured here. Both the heroine and her swain can breath easier this spring for several of winter's enfant-terribles of fashion have given way to kinder trends. The softie styles pictured on these fashion pages may be found at local shops. For information, call The Post Fashion Editor, Marshall Adams, National 4200—between 10 a. m. and 6 p. m.

Lady Moonbeam

The drifting evening gown, above, whispers of moonlight serenades and romantic interludes. Its fragile bolero and overskirt are of crisp soisette, which teams up with sea-green satin beneath. Moral support alone sustains the tucked and heart-shaped bodice.

Walking on Jewels

You literally tread on gold and jewels when you wear the sandals, above. The platform soles are of glittering gems, which also wind themselves around the front and ankle strap. The satin shank and heel are the same golden glow as the gold mesh trimming. Silver kid adds an additional Midas touch to the brocaded evening bag.

Flower Tones

Flowers at the throat, the wrists, and the same deep fuschia tone for the nails. Here is a deep-hued color trilogy introduced by the English cosmetologist, Peggy Sage, in which she dyes nail lacquers in exact tints as early spring flowers. The floral locket gives freshness to a midnight black gown. The wristlet feminizes the hands.

Little Girl Look for Daytime

Baby Halo

A look of wide-eyed expectancy should, at all times, accompany this naive young bonnet. Shining halo of navy straw it is, bound and streamered with matching grosgrain and yards of veiling.

Patent Pointer

Spring's surest omen is the appearance of patent leather used to point up monotone crepe ensembles and frocks such as the one above. The snowy-flowered toque is given contrast by the mammoth bag of black patent colt. The intricate pattern of the bags' zipper trim is repeated in the cut-out design of the patent sandals.

In Print

Wood violets, spaced as neatly as in a greenhouse, are spattered all over the classic two-piece crepe, right. As neat as a pin, this first spring jacket frock is faultless for luncheons and "don't-dress" dinners in town. Its deep violene hues are repeated in the narrow leather belt and nosegay of violets.

Sunny Outlook

The capacious apron front and side-slit pockets are just two of the fashionable news angles of the afternoon dress, above. The pure silk crepon is patterned with a boldly colored Sun King print, adapted from Louis Le Grand medallions. Sunray pleating at the bodice heightens the suggestion of a sunny prospect for spring styles.

Enfant's Bib

Here is the newest and most original of spring blouses, yet it takes you right back to your baby days. It is called the bib blouse, and caused a good deal of excitement among the sophisticated grown-ups when it was recently introduced in Paris. Petit and grand polka dots work at cross sections in the pure silk crepe.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Readers Advise "Depressed," Whose Lone Moral Lapse Threatens Marriage; Cite Similar Cases

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I heartily disagree with the course of action you proposed to "Depressed," in your column of Saturday, February 18. I rather think the man's story is true. He sounds like a weakling, and the type to become involved in something of the sort. Drinking leads to all sorts of things, and in this case, where both the man and the girl were definitely befuddled, what came about was equally the fault of both. I cannot agree with you that the girl is a wanton. She would lack the intestinal fortitude to face the prospect of having a baby if she belonged to the prostitute class. In her way, she knows a sort of honor, in that she has no wish to hurt the man's wife by "telling."

Your advice to the man—i. e., to tell his wife, retain a lawyer, etc.—is, to my way of thinking, unfortunate. A lawyer will cost infinitely more, in the long run, than being kind to the girl. Forty dollars will take care of a baby in a good hospital clinic, and no matter how poor a person is, there are always a few things that can be sacrificed in emergency.

Nothing is to be gained by telling the wife what happened. In her condition, the enormity of his transgression would be magnified and they might never be happy together again. Being cruel is no solution. The man should shoulder his responsibilities, make some arrangements for the girl, protect his wife from this terrible knowledge and try to correct some of the wrong already done. He could borrow on his insurance and do extra work at night to make up the financial outlay. There is always a way out, and not by suicide, either.

Later, if the girl should attempt to burden him by demands on account of the child, he could—if he has any doubts—have a blood test made of the infant and himself, and that would settle it. But in the meantime, he would have the satisfaction of knowing that he had done his part, and had been a gentleman (if a little belatedly) as well as a man.

I read your column daily with interest and I find your advice almost always sound and fair. But in this case, I think your personal distaste for such a particularly ugly example of human frailty (to give it a gentle name) has colored your suggestions. I have come a long way in life and none of it easy, but I have learned much. Best of what I have learned is the inestimable value of tolerance and kindliness. In a difficult life, I have found it to be a great leavener. My personal good wishes. Sincerely,

ANONYMOUS.

Suspects "Frame-Up"

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In answer to "Depressed" (who asks readers' opinions as well as your own), I wish to say that I feel really sorry for him. You seem to doubt the authenticity of the case, but I have heard, from reliable sources, of a similar incident. The man responsible skipped town, so the girl deliberately framed another young man who was about to be married, and got him to pay. Afterward she bragged about how she had framed him.

In my opinion, this is another frame-up. Evidently the girl knew what she wanted when she took that drive, and her tears on the way home were probably a build-up to the letter that followed. Such a girl needs to be put in her place and I sincerely hope this man finds the solution without wrecking his marriage. Perhaps the bachelor friend at whose apartment he met the girl can give him some information on her morals. It looks suspicious for her to start hounding him at the end of six weeks, since even doctors do not definitely say "yes" or "no" that early.

With the aid of a lawyer, he should find out how much truth there is in the girl's story before saying anything to his wife. In the latter's condition, she may not be able to think clearly and might do something rash that would ruin the happiness of both. It would be difficult enough for a wife in the best of health to take such a blow sanely, and she will be better able to stand up to it at a later date, if tell her he must. If it turns out to be a frame-up, it would be best never to mention the episode. Confession in that case could only ease his conscience at the probable cost of destroying her faith, so that she would always be thinking that what had happened once might happen again. I gather this man must be pretty young to have been so easily taken in. SYMPATHIZER.

A Suggested "Out"

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Read your Saturday column with no end of interest. As a professional colleague, may I suggest another angle—a simple out, for "Depressed." The supposedly seduced girl probably isn't pregnant at all, but just pulling a fast one on your innocent correspondent. Therefore, it would be a good idea for him to insist upon an examination by a doctor of his choosing, since newer medical methods detect pregnancy in its earliest stages.

"Depressed's" story, by the way, parallels a classic that a friend of mine tells on himself. As a young scientist in a strange town, he visited the village belle while her family attended church. Presently came the bad news. The unfortunate kid went to unbelievable lengths to raise a couple of hundred dollars and also gave her his best suitcase. But his light o' love didn't go anywhere. He found out presently that he'd fallen for the same story she told all the boys.

Fortunately, he had a good sense of humor, even when he was the butt of the joke, and finally got around to telling the story of this strange adventure to his worldly wise father and mother, from whom it eventually percolated in all directions, with everybody in unsympathetic stitches. His mother's attitude was that it was all water under the bridge and that she'd rather for him to have played the fool than to have been an utter cad. P. S.: He's all settled down now, and one of the best of husbands and fathers.

ANOTHER WRITER.

Thinks "Goat" Was Needed

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a consistent reader of your column and often feel constrained to write airing my views on a particular problem, but after careful study of your reply usually decide I could never improve on your diagnosis. But, in regard to the letter signed "Depressed," published February 18, the urge to write is getting the better of me and I feel I must air my opinion.

Wasn't it a little odd, in the first place, that a "nice" girl should be alone with a bachelor in his apartment, already the worse for drinking? Her subsequent conduct in driving his alcoholically stupefied friend to a secluded spot in the country, where she worked her wiles on him as he regained consciousness, suggests, to my mind, an immediate need, on her part, for finding a supposedly responsible man on whom to place the blame for a condition that already existed.

Of course, if he becomes a party to what looks like a blackmail scheme, he starts a ball rolling that will gather momentum as time goes by. Yet how cruel to tell his wife (as I suppose he must) just at a time when she needs all her love and faith to see her through the ordeal facing her in July. His confession will be a blow from which she may never fully recover. She may, and probably will, forgive, but her love will be irrevocably soiled. Had the girl in question not been in immediate need of a "goat," she would, to my way of thinking, have gone her way and let him go his, in the first place. Sincerely, D. S.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—A final check-up on the Valentine Day situation discloses that 100 couples applied for marriage licenses on the feast day. In the matter of Valentine presents, I am able to report that the movie actor, Wayne Morris, gave his bride, who was Bubbles Schinasi, a gold bracelet from which dangled a small gold heart. The dashing Mr. Morris is frantically in love with the cigarette heiress he married, and this obvious fact needed no bracelet to confirm it. But it was a pretty thought, just the same.

Annual Dog Show Attracts Town Swells in New York

New York, Feb. 22.

LAST WEEK this struggling little city went to the dogs in a very spectacular way—the occasion being the Sixty-third Annual Westminster Dog Show at the Madison Square Garden. This is the fanciest parading of pups known in this vicinity, and during my annual visit I am always in doubt as to what is on exhibition, the pooches or the people who peer at them.

ALICE HUGHES.

This particular dog show brings out all the town swells, the ladies in ermine or mink and the gents in white tie and tails. To one who is not a devoted lover of the canine company, the dog show is a little on the dull side—or it would be if it were not for the uptown gentry which patronizes the occasion. Even a dog-hater would get a kick out of the alleged humans who promenade up and down to visit the various classes. As far as I could discover, the Bedlington is about as fashionable a pup as there is at the moment—and I must admit that there is something very winning about their amiable, sheep-like appearance.

Once the fashionable dogs are safely out of the way, after three days in the limelight at the Garden, one of the local department stores opens its annual pet show in which dogs are judged on the basis of real heart-warming qualities, such as charm and loyalty. This show gives even the street mutt a chance, and pedigrees have no place in the exhibition. Over 2,000 pet dogs are entered in this canine free-for-all, and I'll take it and its entries any time in preference to last week's snooty and blue-blooded showing. It must be the old plebeian coming out in me.

Modern Girl Needs Liberal Code of Manners, Says Author

Sterner Dictums of Mrs. Grundy Revamped By Margaret Fishback; Cites Views Of Young Model Man About Town

By Genevieve Reynolds.

AT THE DAWN of the flapper era, girls about town overthrew the shackles of conventional, mid-Victorian manners for a code of their own. For a time, authorities on social behavior and dyed-in-the-wool sticklers for form looked askance at the lack of formality. Now etiquette as interpreted by Margaret Fishback in her sprightly volume, "Safe Conduct," sanctions the move.

Believing that it is far more important to be happy and genuinely kind than punctiliously right, the author gives a few rules to meet the requirements of present-day standards. Common sense and consideration for other people, rather than dogma and tradition, are the bases of her etiquette.

In order to keep her information up to the minute and as practical as possible, Miss Fishbank sought the opinion of normal young men about town to find out the qualities that men demand for a girl's social success. The men came forth with a variety of answers to questions that have puzzled the modern girl.

Can Dine Alone With Man

Girls, they agreed, could safely dine alone with a man in his apartment. But they should leave early to avoid unfavorable criticism. Departing after midnight, they maintain, might be embarrassing, if some of the host's friends dropped in for a nightcap.

Here's a tip on how to handle an escort who has had too much to drink.

"Never ask him in when you suspect he is not himself," warns Miss Fishbank's unnamed adviser. "If you are dining out with a gay young blade who is tucking them in too fast, don't give him a temperance talk but simply end the evening as soon as possible with a feigned headache or acute appendicitis."

Rules on Kissing

Should a girl kiss a boy good night when he takes her home?

"Don't substitute kissing for conversation," said the model man who gets about. "Indiscriminate kissing is not good taste, but a modest reciprocal peck now and then never did anybody any harm. Don't delude yourself that we men never kiss and tell on the girls who kiss promiscuously. We mean to be gentlemen, but in our cups at the clubs, we are shameless gossips about the girls we know are shameless neckers."

It's a good general rule to leave other women's husbands alone, pointed out the young man. But if you insist on playing around don't dine in little surreptitious restaurants. It's much better to come out into the open as though you have nothing to hide.

Other Suggestions

Here are some other suggestions that the author gleaned from men about town on how the model girl should act in order to be popular:

"Don't tell the waiter what you want. Tell the man and he will do the ordering.

"Don't tell the taxi driver where you are going, tell the man quietly and he will relay the news.

"Don't try to make a man spend more money than he can afford. But don't try to get him to spend less. You sound as if you have designs on him when you worry about his finances.

Don't Act Possessive

"Don't act possessive, for that will frighten him away.

"Don't smoke walking along the street. And don't drink more than you can handle.

"Let a man see that you like him but not too much. Don't ever appear too desperately eager to hold him. Don't seek attentions, for you sink in a man's esteem. And don't gush and drape yourself about his neck. Don't be too concerned about his other women.

"Don't show jealousy—no matter how much you feel it. Jealousy frightens him away.

"Don't be aggressively vivicious, for it wears a man out. Quiet down once in a while. Tranquillity and composure are very nice traits in a female.

"Don't live too far in the suburbs if you can possibly help it."

'The Calmody Children' Holds Popular Favor

Sir Thomas Lawrence Began Painting Career As Infant Prodigy

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

ONE of the most popular pictures in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York is "The Calmody Children," by Sir Thomas Lawrence, an appealing portrait of two lovely little girls. Lawrence was a famous English painter in the early 1800's, following Sir Joshua Reynolds' vogue.

Lawrence had been an infant prodigy who, at the age of 6, was sketching portraits in a public inn and declaiming passages from Milton. By the time he was 10, his drawing was the chief support of his family who had by then come on hard times.

Later Lawrence was befriended by Reynolds, studied at the Royal Academy and at the death of Reynolds became the fashionable portrait painter of London, eventually being appointed court painter and later knighted. He did portraits of many of the crowned heads of Europe and scores of the fashionables of England. For all that, his picture of the actress, Mrs. Siddons, is probably his most celebrated portrait, and the exquisite "Calmody Children" is one of the most widely copied. Lawrence was handsome in looks and elegant in manners, and one of the most popular men in London society of his time. In Thackeray's "Pendennis" there are interesting accounts of the painting circles of London in the time of Reynolds and Lawrence.

The Name, Please?

"'Hello there, Rena St. Clair Blossom! Say, have you seen Marie O'Brien Vertigo?"

"Yes, she just went in the dining room with Grayce Mortimer Ripple."

"Oh say, I want to see Grayce Mortimer Ripple! I hear she sold a poem—"

"Say, look quick! Who on earth is that red-haired woman over there with the purple wimple?"

"Don't you know who THAT is? That's Mabel Demijohn Woodbine—the pageant woman. Come on over and I'll introduce you."

"No, let's wait till Pearl Smythe Tinkle gets through talking to her."

"Say, Pearl Smythe Tinkle will never get through—Oh hello there, Estelle Brown Poplar! You know Rena St. Clair Blossom don't you? . . . Well how's your play coming? . . . That good . . . yes, glad to have seen you. Now then I suppose we ought to hunt up Marie O'Brien Vertigo—"

"Say, I WISH you would look at that woman coming in—the one in the baby bonnet! Where have I seen her before?

"Oh, I know! That's Odessa Lightcap B u n c h-Martyn—she's writing a novel."

"'Oh yes, of course. I was thinking it was an autobiography—"

"Wait, here she comes! Say Odessa Lightcap Bunch-Martyn, I want you to know Rena St. Clair Blossom . . . Oh yes, and here comes Grayce Mortimer Ripple and Marie O'Brien Vertigo! Oh Grayce Mortimer Ripple! Come here! I want you to know Odessa Lightcap Bunch-Tinkle—I mean Martyn . . . Oh yes, and this is Pearl Ripple Demijohn—Oh no, I mean Tinkle Woodbine—no, what I'm trying to say is Estelle Vertigo Blossom—Oh say now, maybe I'd better start in all over."

The Layman

"Are you a writer too, Mrs. Hack? . . . How marvelous! Really I must be the only person here who's not a writer. Of course, though, I've wanted to write all my life. All my friends say I ought to have been a writer . . . Yes, they think I'm throwing my talents away. Now, they say if I would just sit down and write like I talk the publishers would be crazy about it. But, of course, I don't know. I expect there's a lot more of it than just typing it off. Say, tell me one thing, Mrs. Hack, where do you get all your ideas? . . . Oh, you do! Well I just supposed they came to you.

"Well, now, as far as I'm concerned I'm just chock-full of ideas . . . Yes, and I've had lots of wonderful experiences. I really ought to sit down sometime and write those things up. I've got lots of stuff in my head I really ought to give out . . . Yes, things that people ought to know . . . things that people need to know.

"Yes, I really ought to do it, but—well I have so little time and then I guess it'd take a litle trouble to catch on to the technique of the thing. Say—you know Mrs. Hack, I've just thought of something! . . . Yes! . . . Say, why couldn't you and I work together! . . . Yes! I'd furnish the ideas and you could write 'em up—you know, fix 'em up so they'd sell. Yes, now why couldn't I do that? I'd be more than glad to give you whatever was right out of the thing."

The Dilettantes

"Well, what have you been writing lately?"

"Oh, not much of anything. What have you?"

"Well, I've just been so busy I haven't done anything—you know how it is."

"I know. For one thing, of course, I need a new typewriter."

"The trouble with me is I haven't any place to write. If I could just get a study fixed up—I mean some place with an inspiring view—"

"That's the way with me. I can't do a thing unless I can look at nature."

"Well, I think I could write if people would just leave me alone. I keep having to go places—"

"I know. It's just one thing after another. First it was getting ready for Christmas, and now Easter's coming on."

"Yes, and then in the summer it's too hot to do anything."

"I know. But just as soon as fall comes I'm going to get me a new typewriter and really get down to work."

Butter Substitute

Clear chicken fat can be used in many foods in place of butter. However, about seven-eighths of a cup of fat should be used where a cup of butter is called for. Collect the fat with a spoon when it collects on top of stewing chicken stock after the stock has cooled. Store, covered, in refrigerator and use up within a week.

A Skillful Use Of Wall Brackets Helps Many a Room

says "Mary Annette," Decorating Hostess, of The Hecht Co.

Notice I use the word skillful, for wall brackets used indiscriminately have no place in any room. However, few wall spaces above a sofa or large buffet or any large wall-piece, is amply filled by just a mirror or picture. Invariably something else is needed on each side of the picture or mirror. Here is where a pair of decorative brackets can be used with real effect. Beside a mirror you may use them to hold a pair of figures that perhaps accent the color of your sofa. Beside a picture they can be used to hold bowls of ivy. Study your room and see if there isn't an awkward wall space that can be relieved by these inexpensive, yet effective decorating helps.

Your Figure, Madame!

To Gain Weight Appetite Should Be Nurtured; Vitamin B Is Needed in the Diet

ONCE THERE was a thin girl who heard that peanut butter was fattening. So she ate half a pound—a mere 1,370 carolies—in addition to her regular meals that day. The next day she had indigestion and before she got herself straightened out, her weight gaining splurge had cost three precious pounds.

You can't suddenly begin eating a lot of food to gain weight. Extra food does you no good unless you can assimilate it, and it is apt to do you harm. For this reason, the weight gainer's menus should contain no fried foods or pastries—you may have been eating all you wanted of both without gaining weight!

And you cannot take all your extra calories at one sitting—your capacity is small and you are easily satisfied. The best plan is to scatter these extra calories throughout the day so that you eat five or even six times. In that way you do not have to force yourself to eat more than usual.

Pound a Week Gain

It is not hard to get these calories in. You can gain 1 pound a week by adding 500 calories to your daily requirements—and you can add 540 calories simply by drinking a glass of whole milk three times a day, morning, afternoon and before retiring.

Since you haven't much appetite and must try in every possible way to improve it, you will find it helpful to step up the vitamin B1 content of your diet. This vitamin is particularly important to the underweights. A B1 deficiency may lead to digestive disturbances, impaired nutrition and fatigue. It is supplied liberally in whole grains—cereals and breads—but you may wish to take a supplementary concentrate. If your underweight is serious you should consult your doctor before attempting a gaining program and you may ask him about the vitamins then.

Must Use System

You can readily see that life must be systematized to enable you to gain. The chances are that food is not important to you, so you may have to remind yourself occasionally that it means the difference between stringliness and curves; that a well-balanced diet may make the difference between low vitality and exuberant health. You can't afford to miss a meal!

Food, however, is not the whole story. You need a certain amount of exercise to whip up your circulation and to stimulate muscle tone. Consistent exercise, preferably out of doors, will make it easier for you to relax. And putting yourself on a definite program will enable you to go to sleep at a respectable hour. So many underweights are insomniacs! Just before going to bed, drink a glass of warm milk, and then, if you can't sleep, read a monotonous book.

Once you get your life running on schedule, you will find that weight gaining is comparatively easy . . . and that anything I have told you about the improvement it makes in your well being is understatement!

Yours exclusively!

Capital Society:

Dr. Castillo Najera Again Returns to Mexico City

Ambassador Officially Called Home to Complete Report on Lima Pan American Conference

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

DRAMATIC CIRCLING: A veritable commuter between this country and his own in the past few months, Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera should know by now every turn in the road from Washington to Mexico City. Only recently returned to his post here, he is again on his way to his native land where he has been officially called "to complete a report on the Lima Pan-American conference."

HOPE R. MILLER

He and Senora de Castillo Najera and their young son, Memo, left last night by train. They are expected to return in two or three weeks, according to Dr. Rafael Fuentes, counselor of the embassy.

Rumor is going the rounds, however, that the envoy's real reason for leaving has little to do with the Lima meeting, and that it has some connection with the forthcoming visit to Mexico of Donald Richberg and Patrick J. Hurley, who are scheduled for a conference with President Lazaro Cardenas early in March. Talk then, doubtless, will center around settlement of the oil expropriation issue, since both Mr. Richberg and Mr. Hurley represent two major oil companies.

Chances are President Cardenas wants to consult Dr. Castillo Najara before seeing the lawyers, since the former recently conferred with President Roosevelt and Undersecretary Welles on the oil question.

Other rumors rippling across teacups and over dinner tables have it that Dr. Castillo Najera will not return to Washington at all . . . that he will be succeeded by Ramon Beteta Quintant, Mexico's undersecretary of foreign affairs . . . and that the present envoy may soon become a candidate for the Presidency of Mexico. Asked recently about the possibility of the latter, Dr. Castillo Najera was emphatic in his denial. "Not a word of truth in the rumor," he said. Anyway, if the envoy's departure last night was a final one, Washington will lose one of the most brilliant men in its Diplomatic Corps.

LITERARY NOTE: A book you had just as well read now, because you're going to hear a lot about it soon, is Martha Dodd's "Through Embassy Eyes," published today. I've just finished an advance copy and found it a rather prejudiced account of a diplomatic daughter's four years in modern Germany. But the sidelights on Nazi personalities are interesting, though somewhat naive and not too significant.

There are numerous references to "suave and gentle" Hans Thomsen (who is now charge d'affaires here) whom even Miss Dodd finds attractive despite his "passionate partisanship." Dr. Hans Dieckhoff, German Ambassador, is analyzed in detail, too, as are a number of top-ranking officials in the Nazi regime.

William Bullitt, whom the author met on a trip to Russia, comes in for his share of Dodd diagnosis. "To me," she writes in reference to him, "a man who inspires the immediate question—What is he really like underneath, what would be his character and personality at home, every day, when the mask was dropped—is a man to be suspicious of and one not to be trusted."

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: Oswaldo Aranha, Brazil's Minister of Foreign Relations, will be feted at a dinner to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja tomorrow night . . . Grace Zaring Stone (Mrs. Ellis Stone), who with her husband will leave Washington this week-end will be guest of honor today at a luncheon given by Mrs. Robert Munroe . . . Capt. and Mrs. Julius Furer will have guests to dinner tonight . . . Commander and Mrs. Greene Dugger will entertain at a small cocktail party tomorrow afternoon . . . Mr. and Mrs. John O. Herrick will return from Boston tomorrow. Their Scottish deerhound, "The Abbott," already the winner of 11 of the 15 points necessary for a championship, was an entry in the dog show there yesterday . . .

Ski Enthusiasts Limp Back as Amateur Skaters Contort at Chevy Chase Ice Palace

THE SKI enthusiasts are beginning to return from Canada with light sunburns and heavy colds. Laura Tuckerman is back with both; and Commander Anthony Coleby of the British Embassy returned earlier in the week. They were with a party at St. Sauveur, where there are at present a dozen other Washingtonians, all going for 10-mile cross-country trips during the day.

Off in the opposite direction next week are Mr. and Mrs. Walter White, who will vacation in Florida. Mrs. Horace Peters also hopes to go there for a stay shortly.

ANYBODY in search of a good laugh should go to the Chevy Chase Ice Palace and watch the contortions of members of the Ice Club who are taking beginners' lessons in fancy skating from one of the instructors. The other afternoon she had everybody line up in a circle and, holding hands, go around on their inside edges. In the resulting confusion, those who managed clumsily to stand erect had their arms practically torn from their sockets, while the others—and the group ranged in age from 16 to 60—went down in a heap like ninepins.

VISITING Britishers are certainly cracking down on the charms of American girls this winter. Sir William Becher, who is described as "a glamour boy over from England," has decided, after a stay in New York, that "an English girl, when she is attractive, is much more attractive than an American girl." He continues "I think American girls are very spoiled and that's why the marriages here are such failures."

The young men here take an even worse beating from Sir William, who calls them "wretched, wash-out, emaciated boys" and "very unattractive college youngsters."

Sir William is sailing Saturday for England, but there must be some things he likes about this country, as he plans to return soon.

It will be recalled that another Britisher, Charles Graves, paid Washington a visit earlier in the season and confided to his readers in the London Daily Mail that American girls seemed to be supremely unattractive, and their escorts horribly dressed.

WITH the next installment of "A Pair of White Gloves," the amusing reminiscences of a well-known society editor due soon on the newsstands, have you ever noticed how few white gloves are worn in Washington? In these articles the author says you can get anywhere in society if you wear gloves of this particular shade, and wishing to check up, a well-known hostess asked her butler to keep count of the number worn at a large tea she gave recently. With a hundred feminine guests, the butler counted exactly two pairs of white gloves.

Washington has a reputation of doing less about dress than almost any other large city. Women here seem to feel that if they wear lame in the afternoon people will giggle, and the trend is mostly toward simple black frocks and tweed.

ATTORNEY GENERAL Frank Murphy, who is now at Whitehall in Palm Beach, is very popular even in that Republican stronghold, according to word from there. Though he consistently avoids the night life, he has visited there before as Commissioner to the Philippines and later as Attorney General.

ANNOUNCEMENT of the next exhibition at the Washington Gallery of the Museum of Modern Art should be of interest, as there will be a contest with the prizes memberships in the museum. The present showing, "Paris Painters of Today," will close on Sunday after a very successful run. Thousands of people have visited the galleries and five paintings were sold: Utrillo's "Moulin de la Gallette;" Duffy's "Le Pont Neuf;" Tal-Coat's "Le Singe;" Herauts "D'Enfant Royal" and Bombois' "Moulin en Repos."

Anne McAdoo Bridal April 1

Miss Anne Preston McAdoo has selected the afternoon of April 1 as the time of her wedding to Robert Bell Deford. Miss McAdoo is a daughter of Francis Huger McAdoo and a granddaughter of former Senator William Gibbs McAdoo.

The ceremony will be performed in Christ Episcopal Church in Baltimore at 4 o'clock and will be followed by a reception at Knollwood, the country home of the bride's mother, Mrs. E. McCormack Keith, in Green Spring Valley.

The brother of the future bride, Francis McAdoo, jr., will be married to Miss Cynthia Stowe Heffron, daughter of Mrs. John Heffron, of Greenwich, Conn., and the late Mr. Heffron, March 25, at Greenwich.

Ralph W. Paynes Visiting Miami Beach

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph W. Payne, who have been in St. Augustine, Fla., at the Ponce de Leon Hotel, are now in Miami Beach.

Before leaving St. Augustine, they entertained at a dinner for eight guests. Now at the Hotel Ponce de Leon are Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Babs, of Washington, who will be there fore a brief stay before visiting other Florida points of interest.

Mrs. Frances Keyes Lectures Tonight

Several small dinner parties will precede the lecture to be given tonight by Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes at the Willard for the benefit of the restoration of the Carmelite Convent at Port Tobacco, Md.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hill are entertaining friends from Southern Maryland and Mr. and Mrs. Camden McAtee will have as their honor guest at dinner the Rev. Mgr. Edward L. Buckey.

Additional patrons for the lecture are Princess Boncompagni, the Rev. Thomas M. Hilduff, Miss Mary Kolb, Mrs. William Knoblock, the Sisters of the Visitation Convent, Miss Edna Sheehy and Dr. and Mrs. Davenport White.

Intolerance Assailed At Luncheon

Speakers Attack D. A. R. at Meeting Of Descendants Of Revolution

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Denunciation of "the growing spirit of intolerance in this country," emphasis on the Declaration of Independence and several pointed references to the Daughters of the American Revolution, were highlights of the Washington's Birthday luncheon of the newly organized Descendants of the American Revolution yesterday at Wesley Hall.

Representative Kent Keller, of Illinois, presided, Senator Elbert D. Thomas, of Utah, was the principal speaker. The luncheon preceded by a wreath laying ceremony at the Washington Monument, with Susan B. Anthony participating.

Mrs. Charles Putnam, whose talk opened the luncheon program, called attention to the fact that Marian Anderson, "an American citizen and a great artist has been denied the use of Constitution Hall" and urged members of the group to use their influence against any discrimination on the basis of race, creed or political belief. This was one of the ten points in the program of the national organization, which she read. She also quoted a statement issued by New York headquarters which referred to "the common bond described by President Roosevelt when he said: 'Remember you and I are descended from immigrants and revolutionists.'"

References to D. A. R. Incidental to Program

Representative John Coffee, of Washington, who spoke briefly, made reference to this agency and characterized as "an amazing episode" the President's reminder to the Daughters of the American Revolution of this at their last annual congress.

Although Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, sister of Senator Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, suggested a resolution that the descendants "attempt to put a sense of humor into the D. A. R." and Edwin Smith, of the National Labor Relations Board, charged that the Daughters of the American Revolution lacked "not only that but an appreciation of the ideals of their forefathers and do lip-service to those ideals but traduce them in fact," the meeting was not devoted to attacks on this long-established patriotic organization. Criticism of the D. A. R. was incidental to the rest of the program.

Urge Investigation of Un-American Activities

Cheers were mixed with applause when Representative Coffee paid tribute to Representative Keller for "the decisive fashion in which he exposed the way evidence was presented before the Dies Committee."

He suggested a study of un-American activities including those of the German-American Bunds in an effort to make the people of the United States aware of the growth of intolerance given impetus by the propaganda of such groups. When Representative Kellar spoke he called on his audience to repeat with him the first lines of the Declaration of Independence, which a surprising number knew.

Senator Thomas, whose subject was "What the Constitutional Fathers Dreamed," declared the Government they established was the expression of a concept of progress and freedom for which men had struggled through the ages. He traced the steps from oppression to revolution, from persecution to forbearance, from forbearance to tolerance and from tolerance to appreciation of "the stranger that is within our gates." The Golden Rule, he said, defines the only attitude which will bring order out of chaos.

Many Young People In Luncheon Group

There were 100 at the luncheon, many of them young men and women. The group is not yet organized formally but will have an organization meeting within the month. The first was held at the home of Mrs. Putnam.

Members must be descended "from a man or woman who loyally served the cause of the American Revolution as a soldier, sailor or civil officer, as a recognized patriot or who rendered material aid thereto," the requirements state.

After the banquet the young ladies will be joined by their escorts at 10 o'clock for a supper dance in the Metronome Room.

Mrs. Watkins to Speak

Mrs. Charles Watkins will give an informal talk on her experiences in educational work at the meeting of the Entre Nous Club to be held tomorrow at the Girls Hospice, 1525 Sixteenth street, at 2 o'clock. Mrs. Hazel Brown Piers will present the musical program, and Mrs. Charles F. Keyser, the president, will preside.

New Officers Take Over Women Democrats' Club

Mrs. J. T. Grimsley Resigns After Nine Years As Executive Secretary; Mrs. Moorhead Speaks at Ceremonies at Wilson's Tomb

Not only new elective officers but also a new executive secretary will take the helm of the Woman's National Democratic Club this year, it was announced yesterday at the annual meeting of the organization. The slate of officers, headed by Mrs. David Tucker Brown, was voted on without opposition as had been expected, but announcement by Mrs. John T. Grimsley that she was resigning as executive secretary, came as a complete surprise and was received with much regret.

Mrs. Grimsley's resignation was accepted with expressions of high tribute for her nine years' service. She has managed the club with an efficiency and graciousness during that period which have been credited with contributing in a large measure to its success as a headquarters for Democratic women of the country. Her resignation will be effective March 31, when she will take another position.

Mrs. Claude Pepper First Vice President

New officers who will serve with Mrs. Brown include: First vice president, Mrs. Claude Pepper; second vice president, Mrs. Mark L. Bristol; recording secretary, Mrs. Joseph D. Election results will be formally announced at the annual dinner this evening at 7:30 o'clock, at which Representative T. V. Smith, of Illinois, will be the guest of honor, speaking on "Women Politicians."

Mrs. Moorhead made a brief speech in the morning at the ceremonies at Wilson't tomb. She quoted a passage from his writings in 1923, after his retirement.

Democracies Must Save Civilization

"There must be some real ground for the universal unrest and perturbation," he writes. "It is not found in superficial politics or in mere economic blunders. It probably lies deep at the sources of the spiritual life of our time. But democracy has not yet made the world safe against irrational revolution. That supreme task which is nothing less than the salvation of civilization, now faces democracy, insistent, imperative. There is no escaping it unless everything we have built up is presently to fall in ruin about us, and the United States as the greatest of democracies, must undertake it."

"To that supreme task—insistent, imperative, we of the Woman's National Democratic Club rededicate ourselves," Mrs. Moorhead declared.

Cy Pres Club Banquet Hears Rep. Byron

Washington's Views Called Inapplicable to Foreign Affairs Today

George Washington's attitude would have been different today on the subject of international relations than it was in his era, Representative William Byron, of Maryland, told members of the Cy Pres Club last night. Speaking at the annual banquet at the Shoreham Hotel, he asserted modern conditions would have altered in some respects the views of the Father of His Country.

Representative Byron, although asserting he was neither holding a brief for the World Court or the League of Nations, declared that speed of communication and transportation, undreamed of in Washington's day, had brought the world so close together it was impossible to evaluate situations from the basis of a century or more ago.

Pointing out that this democracy was practically the only government which had not undergone a radical change in the last 150 years, he said Americans should be earnest in their efforts to continue to maintain it. In the face of international unrest, preparedness is an essential to protection, he said.

Sharing the program with Representative Byron was Dr. S. Lovell Bixby, chief of probation and parole in the Federal Bureau of Prisons, Department of Justice. Dr. Bixby, who discussed the branch of administration in which he is engaged, spoke in place of Miss Nina Kinsella, president of the Business and Professional Women's Club, who is also in the Bureau of Prisons.

Miss Ruth Marvick, president of the club, presided and introduced for brief talks members of the faculty of the law school of National University, women students of which comprise the club. The professors included Dr. Charles Pergler, dean of the school; Charles Ford, professor of criminal law; Ugo Carusi, who gave an Italian dialect recitation; Judge Milton Strasberger, professor of equity and the D. C. Code; Bryce Clagett, professor of contract law, and O. L. Mohundro, professor of interstate commerce law. Mrs. Charles F. Carusi also spoke briefly.

Kappa Phi Epsilon To Hold Banquet

Miss Elizabeth Williams, chairman of the ways and means committee of the Kappa Phi Epsilon Law Sorority, has completed arrangements for a banquet to be held at the Powhatan Hotel on Saturday. The banquet will be limited to members of the sorority and a few guests, but escorts and friends of the members have been invited for dancing following the banquet.

Invitations to the banquet have been extended to Judge Fay Bentley, Miss Beatrice Clephane, Miss Nina Kinsella, Judge Ellen K. Raedy, Mrs. James A. Bell, wife of the president of Southeastern University, and Miss Margaret E. Betts, registrar.

One of the guest speakers at the banquet will be Miss Mae Helm, of the staff of the Department of Justice. Previously she was a practicing lawyer in the District and assistant corporation counsel. She is a member of the Kentucky Bar and the District of Columbia Bar; also member of the International Association of Women Lawyers and of the Women's District Bar Association.

R., will sing "The Star-Spangled Banner," and Mrs. William D. Leetch, State D. A. R. chairman of the correct use of the flag, will speak. Mrs. Ray Brown is president of the society.

MRS. I. J. ROBERTS will be hostess tomorrow at a benefit card party, planned by the Rubinstein Club. It will be held at her home, 1330 Jefferson street. She is in charge of reservations.

The evening meeting took the place of the usual midweek tea.

Dr. Mary Meek Atkeson Moore will have the members of the executive board as dinner guests at her home, 3625 Sixteenth street, tomorrow at 6:30 p. m.

C. Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Charles F. Keyser, president of the club, appointed Mrs. Lloyd Biddle and Mrs. Ernest Howard as a committee to study the Griffenhagen report on reorganization of the District government.

Lent Begins With Special Services

Bishop Freeman Warns of Dark Days If Forces of Evil Are Not Attacked

"The Christian Church must attack the present world-wide forces of evil consistently if we are to avoid seeing the most shadowy days known in the history of this Republic," the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, warned yesterday.

Delivered at the breakfast conference of the Potomac Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in Satterlee Hall, St. Albans, the address followed Corporate Communion for men and boys, one of the scores of Ash Wednesday services ushering in the Lenten season.

Catholics Bless Ashes

In the Catholic churches, sermons and benediction last night climaxed the day's worship. Ashes were blessed.

In addition to the Cathedral, special Protestant rites were centered at Epiphany, Grace Lutheran and Foundry Church, as well as in many other churches throughout the city.

In the course of his message at the conference, over which Justice Owen J. Roberts, of the Supreme Court presided, Bishop Freeman pointed out that . . . "throughout our politics, our social life, and even in the pulpit itself, we are divided; but equality and unity are found when we kneel before the table of our Lord, the Sovereign of Life."

Roosevelt Letter Read

H. Lawrence Choate, president of the Potomac Asembly, and national treasurer, read a letter from President Roosevelt, in which the Chief Executive expressed regret at not being in Washington to attend the conference.

"The assembling of thousands of young men and boys throughout the country in religious services evidencing their loyalty to their religion and their God is a project of great benefit to the spiritual life of our communities and of the country as a whole," Roosevelt wrote.

"I am particularly concerned at this time that spiritual and religious values in this country shall be maintained and strengthened. The work which the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has done in promoting these Corporate Communion celebrations and in helping young men and women to develop genuine religious values in their lives is entitled to every possible encouragement."

Speaking last night at Communion services at Foundry Methodist Church, where members of three branches of Methodism worshipped together for the first time on Ash Wednesday, the Rev. Robin Gould, pastor of Francis Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church South, said that "every life always is justified by its attitude toward Jesus Christ."

"The life of hatred is another 'Judas' life," he declared, "the spirit of cowardice is another 'Pontius Pilate,' and the spirit of contempt for human weakness is another 'Herod.'

Noon Day Services Inaugurated

Epiphany Church held special services throughout the day, including the inauguration of the noonday programs, with the Rev. Karl L. Tiedemann, O. H. C., preaching. At 4:45, the annual Wednesday programs sponsored by the Washington Federation of Churches were begun, with the Rev. Reno S. Harp, jr., rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, Takoma Park, as guest speaker. Another special program was held at Grace Lutheran Church, where Dr. Gerhard E. Lenski, pastor, spoke.

Protestants of Chevy Chase will unite in services tonight at 8 p. m. at Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church, with the Rev. Arthur C. Baldwin, pastor of the Chestnut Street Baptist Church, Philadelphia, preaching.

Many local churches will sponsor daily Lenten programs. The Shrine of the Sacred Heart, has scheduled services for every Tuesday and Wednesday at 7:30 p. m.

Stations of the Cross will be held each Friday in Catholic churches, and daily midday masses are slated for St. Patrick's, Tenth and G streets northwest, and at the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

Capital News In Brief

Cat Wanted for Funeral

Two days ago, "Tabby" a 9-year-old Persian cat belonging to Mrs. Florence E. Weeks, of the 3700 block Nichols avenue southeast, died.

Mrs. Weeks did not have room or money to give "Tabby" the burial plot that he deserved, so a friend in Arlington County suggested that Mrs. Weeks bring the cat to her home and they would bury him there.

Yesterday as Mrs. Weeks got off the bus she had "Tabby" wrapped in newspapers under her arm. Two blocks from her friend's house, a colored man accosted her and threatened to kill her if she made a move. He grabbed the package and darted into an alley.

"If the man who stole my dead kitten will return it," Mrs. Meeks said last night, "I will not ask any questions."

Artist Home Again

Miss Ruth Peter, Washington soprano, was guest artist last night on the Open House program of station WMAL.

"I was invited to sing here," she explained, "because I was the first person to sing over station WRC back in 1923."

Miss Peter added she was always glad to come back to the National Capital, although she has become "accustomed" to life in New York.

Home Towners Parade for Washington

Alexandrians Line Streets; Ceremonies Held at Mount Vernon

Alexandria, George Washington's home town, held a snappy parade in his honor yesterday, sending 2,000 marchers down 11 blocks of King street stepping fast against the winds that inconvenienced 5,000 citizens at the curb sides.

The parade, civic and military, full of flags and lifted by nine blaring bands—a revival of the historic marches Alexandria abandoned in 1932—wound up at King and West streets, where the last units, the Franconia and Alexandria Fire Departments, got a big hand for their nifty stepping and the bouquets they carried.

There was no dallying in it; the crowd and the marchers scattered for warmer places.

More solemnly, the Grand Masters from all Masonic jurisdictions in America, in annual meeting in Alexandria where George Washington once was a Grand Master, reported that slightly less than $60,000 was donated in the past year for additional work on the towering George Washington National Masonic Memorial Temple on Shooter's Hill, Alexandria. They convened briefly in the completed auditorium of the temple and adjourned to Mount Vernon to lay a wreath on Washington's tomb.

The cold weather gave it a snappy start. It moved at 2:30, the scheduled time, on the dot. It whanged down King street, headed by Grand Marshal Col. W. C. Crane, of Fort Myer. In the center marched the George Washington High School cadet corps, led by Frances Harlow, drum major.

In the line were an escort of police, grand marshal, Fifth Engineer band, First Battalion Engineers, mounted band Cavalry, troop Cavalry, artillery, tanks, Thirty-fourth Infantry band, Navy detachment, Coast Guard detachment, National Guardsmen and Marine reserves, George Washington High School cadet band, Alexandria High School, V. F. W. band, Spanish War veterans, Elks' Boys band, Washington and Alexandria Boy and Girl Scouts, Holy Comforter band, American Legion Post 40, Shrine bugle and drum corps, fraternal organizations, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia drum and bugle corps, and others.

Principles of Washington Basic Today, Starnes Says

Organized Minorities' Demands Departure From Patriot's Creed, Order of Purple Heart Told

Demands of organized minorities for special favors from Congress represent the greatest departure today from the principles laid down by George Washington, Representative Joseph Starnes, of Alabama, told the Mount Vernon Chapter, No. 22, Military Order of the Purple Heart, at its Washington's birthday banquet at the Kenesaw Hotel last night.

Pressure groups are not only an attack on national unity, Representative Starnes said, but by making demands Congress finds it impossible to meet they endanger the public credit, which the first President had urged be safeguarded. Adding that a further menace was the "three great 'isms'" imported from abroad, he urged that every alien agitator spreading un-American doctrines be deported.

Other principles laid down by Washington, that religion and morality should be the basis of politics as well as of personal lives, and that foreign relations should be based on a just and impartial treatment of all nations, are of equal importance today, he declared.

The Order was founded by Washington in the Revolutionary War to honor those distinguished in action. Besides a group of songs by Mrs. Emilie Schuler and violin solos by Marvin E. Davis, the celebrations included a talk by Miss Ann Singleton, a member of the Order in virtue of a Citation of Merit awarded for services during the war, and on her experiences in Manchuria in the wars between the Chinese generals Wu-Pei-Fu and Chang-Tso-Lin.

Robert M. Forkish, past commander of the chapter, presided, and Maj. Lee Cohen, commander, was toastmaster. Frank Long is senior vice commander, and Israel Kauffman junior vice commander.

Office Cost Of Relief Assailed

Different Social Security Aid Categories Called Wasteful by Lewis

High administrative costs made necessary by assigning needy persons to different social security aid categories were attacked as "wasteful" in another installment, made public yesterday, of the report of Burdette G. Lewis on local relief problems.

Miss Margaret C. Miller, a member of Lewis' staff investigating District relief, asked:

"Does it not seem costly and wasteful to spend so much in determining eligibility and classifying people under one category or another?"

Criticizes Confusion

Miss Miller also criticized confusion and injustice resulting from the differences in amounts of relief provided under the various assistance categories as well as in the requirements for eligibility.

When the plan was conceived of heading up the assistance program under single administrative departments in the various States, she said, the feeling was that adequate standards of assistance provided for in the program "would guide the way to establishment of all assistance on such a basis."

Instead, she said, the trend has been for communities to reduce the standard of assistance to "the level of relief or general relief which has been all the community felt it could afford." Where this has not occurred, she said, the varying amounts of relief given in the different categories has caused criticism.

"If there is not enough money," Miss Miller said, "then all forms of aid administered here by the public assistance division of the Board of Public Welfare must be brought to the lowest level."

In this case, she said, "we are back again to giving on the basis of need. This need does not cover, in many instances, more than half the amount required to maintain a standard of health and decency."

If need is to be the essential requirement, she intimated, the money spent in determining the particular assistance category the needy person is to be assigned to might as well be saved.

"We are still spending a lot of money," she declared, "in verifying age, residence, and citizenship, and in some places other points which are unnecessary routines if need is the only consideration."

38 Per Cent of Standard Met

She asked whether the purpose of the different categories was to "classify people so we may prove that they are in need in order to satisfy those who must pay the bill?"

In 1937, Miss Miller declared, relief recipients throughout the country lived on an income providing about 38 per cent of a health and decency standard.

"What will happen," she asked, "if families must exist many more years in this manner? The answer is that the State and Federal governments are to have an ever-mounting burden of people who are physically unfit or have lost all incentive or possibility of rehabilitation."

Local relief recipients, Miss Miller's report disclosed, are allowed 50 cents per month for "incidentals," such as replacement of household equipment and emergency medicines. Aged persons here, under the social security matching program, are allowed $2 per month for clothing. Parents receiving aid to dependent children, another social security aid to dependent children another social security aid category, however, are allowed only $1 per month for clothing.

Rude 'Rescuers' Interrupt Siesta Of D. C. Attorney

Enjoying a midafternoon nap yesterday in his ninth floor offices in the Westory Building, Fourteenth and F streets northwest, William J. Peters, attorney, of 3400 Macomb street northwest, opened the window and propped his feet comfortably on the sill.

No response was heard to several raps on the door by three uniformed policemen, four detectives, a reporter and several building attendants, making up the "rescuing party." As officers were debating whether to break down the door, Mr. Peters appeared and demanded sharply, "Who's making all the noise?"

She's 92—or 93—But Reigns Supreme as Pie Baker

MRS. SUSAN LEPLEY

Mrs. Susan Lepley, Who Dreams Of World Travel, Isn't Sure Of Birth Year But Knows Day

(This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding that so-called "old age" is really a lot of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies. You know some qualifiers. Tell us who they are—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

There is some doubt as to whether Mrs. Susan Lepley will be 92 or 93 tomorrow but no one who has ever sampled her pastry products will enter into argument over the deliciousness of her pies.

"Oh, they're just plain pies," Mrs. Lepley says modestly, shushing her daughter, Mrs. Louis B. Bender, who is insisting that they cannot be beat.

Dreams of World Jaunt

"If I had the money I would take a trip around the world," says Mrs. Lepley.

At that, she has been in almost every State in the Union at one time or another. Born in Pennsylvania of old German stock, she found she could hardly speak the new language when she and her husband, now deceased, moved to Kansas in 1878. Subsequently she lived in Texas, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Salem, Oreg., Seattle, Florida and Canada.

A few years ago she had a grand time traveling alone from Topeka into Canada. She has been living in Washington with the Benders for the last three years.

Mrs. Lepley isn't quite sure whether the year of her birth was 1846 or 1847. As to the date being February 24, however, she is quite positive. She was one of eight children, of whom only two survive.

As Agile as Younger Sister

"My sister may be 11 years younger but I think I get around just as good as she does," Mrs. Lepley observes. "I believe in getting plenty sleep, going to bed early and arising early. The younger generation stays up too late, I think."

Many of the nominations which have been received for "Life Begins at 70" involve men and women who live at a distance from Washington. Since all of these articles are based upon personal interviews and it is obviously impractical to go far afield for them, it was decided to mention from time to time the more interesting of these candidates proposed by Post readers. Beginning today, then:

Francis Alexander Lovelock, 81 next May 10, of Lynchburg, Va., who for the last 43 years has been working on newspapers owned by Senator Carter Glass. Exchange editor of the Lynchburg Advance for the last two years, he served for 32 years as secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Interstate Fair Association until its dissolution in September, 1937. He is hale and hearty.

Mrs. John S. Reed, 84, of Huntsville, Ala., who, after playing a Beethoven sonata at the annual meeting of the State Federation of Music Clubs by special invitation, said: "I could have done better if I hadn't worn this hat; I found after I got here that the others weren't wearing hats."

Presbyterian Conclave on Unity Opens

Representatives of Northern, Southern Branches Convene In Washington

The "Northern" and "Southern" Presbyterian Churches moved closer to unity yesterday, as national leaders of the two branches gathered at the Washington Hotel for a fraternal meeting.

Although no definite action was taken the Rev. E. C. Scott, executive secretary of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (Southern), said "we feel that something definite will grow out of these discussions."

Declining further comment, the Rev. Mr. Scott and other participants in the meeting explained that reports must be submitted to full committees and to the General Assembly before being made public.

The Rev. Thomas W. Currie, Austin, Tex., president of Austin Theological Seminary, also represented the "Southern" Church. Among the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (Northern) were the Rev. J. Ross Stevenson, Princeton, N. J., and the Rev. Ralph Waldo Lloyd, Marysville, Tenn.

The "Southern" Church has a communicant membership of about 500,000, while the "Northern" Church has 2,000,000.

Dr. Freely Rohrer, stated clerk of the Washington Presbytery, said: "We have been long anticipating that the Northern and Southern Presbyterian churches would unite. I have been zealously for it all the time. Not only that, but I have wished that the United Presbyterians might come in, too."

According to Dr. Rohrer, union between the two branches would mean that close to 15,000 members of the Washington City Presbytery (Northern) would be united with the Potomac Presbytery (Southern). Dr. Andrew R. Bird, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of the Pilgrims (Southern), said the membership of the Potomac Presbytery, which embraces congregations in Washington, as well as in parts of Virginia and Maryland, has about 5,000 members.

CIENCIA WINS $50,000 ANITA DERBY

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 22.

We have jumped to the conclusion that a strong back and a weak mind is one formula for success in the big leagues. There are others, of course, but a preponderance of muscle over mind has worked out satisfactorily in notable cases in the big leagues. At least high intellect is no prerequisite of big-league baseball. It fires the imagination and that can be a drawback.

POVICH.

There have been ballplayers and still are, who are not quite bright as mentality is measured, and they have been good ball players. Sometimes they have been tops. Co-ordination of muscle and eyesight can be more of a boon than the highest academic honors or an abnormal I. Q. When a hitter steps to the plate his college degree, if he has one, is at that moment about as useful as a called third strike. What can be exceedingly utilitarian under the circumstances is a nice pair of shoulders, a sound swing and not too much imagination. A bit of ego would also help.

Mr. Bucky Harris, manager of the Washington club, inspired this piece this morning when he was speaking of batters. He was talking about a Washington outfielder who has not yet reported to the Nats' camp. He was saying that the guy was a good hitter. That you couldn't take that fact away from him. That there were lots of hitters of his type, a trifle on the dumb side which, in fact was a blessing.

Stands Up and Takes Cut

"Why, he'll hit .325 in this league as long as he can move around. He just gets up there and takes his cut at the ball. He doesn't care who's pitching. Half the time, he probably doesn't know anyway. What he knows chiefly is that he's got a bat in his hand and always could hit. He lacks the imagination to understand that the pitcher is trying to throw him off balance or would fool him with a No. 2. When he gets the feel of that bat in his hands, he has confidence. Call it ego, or anything you like. It makes natural hitters and they just lay back and bang away when the good one comes up there. It's the pitcher who's in a hole when a guy like that is at the plate."

Back in 1921, when he joined the Nats, Goose Goslin was as crude a rookie as was ever brought up to the big leagues. Seventeen years of baseball and travel literally knocked the rough edges off the Goose who blossomed as something of a bon vivant and master of repartee. But when he came up from Greenville, in the Sally League, he was merely a big, broad-backed yokel who could swing a bat hard and hit a ball far.

Urban Faber was pitching for the White Sox in the game in which Goslin made his debut in a Washington uniform. That meant the Nats would be lucky to win. Faber and his spitter was the scourge of the American League at that time. The Nats didn't figure to score more than a run at the most. At the announcement that Faber would be the White Sox pitcher, there was an air of resignation on the Washington bench.

For six innings they didn't make a hit off him, either. But in the sixth, an error and a base on balls put two men on base. Up came the Goose. If he was impressed with Faber's reputation, there was no way to guess it. He gripped his bat on the end, stood at the plate with a confident swagger, and when he picked out a pitch, he swung. He hit it against the rightfield fence for three bases, scored two runs and won the ball game.

"Nice going," they told the Goose on his return to the bench. "Yeah," said Goslin, "that red-head tried to throw a fast one by me. What's his name, anyway? Has he been around long?" And the Goose wasn't kidding.

There Was Berg, Ruel

The Washington Club within the past dozen years has had as erudite a pair of catchers as any club ever boasted. In fact, Muddy Ruel and Moe Berg were mental giants among big league ballplayers. Ruel, an attorney in the off-season, was the only player in baseball history to win the right to practice before the United States Supreme Court. Berg was a graduate of Princeton University and the Sorbonne, in Paris. He was a master linguist. Reposing in the Congressional Library is his thesis on Sanskrit.

Yet all of their intellect was no help when they faced big league pitching. Neither ever was rated as a .300 hitter. Their very mental prowess was a liability, perhaps. Perhaps they foresaw too many possibilities when they stood at the plate with a bat in their hands. It may have served to make them jittery. Anyway, they weren't good hitters.

Sheriff Dave Harris, a Carolina hillbilly, a natural hitter if there ever was one, expressed it best, perhaps, when he saw Moe Berg go to the plate on one occasion. "Now look at that smart guy up there," said Dave. "None of them seven languages he knows is gonna do him a bit of good when that pitcher throws him that No. 2."

Of Monte Weaver's mental brilliance there never has been any question. He graduated with honors from Emory and Henry University. He was offered and accepted a professorship on the University of Virginia faculty. He's smart, yet he isn't a good big-league pitcher because he hasn't been able to learn, in six years of pitching, how to hide the grip on his delivery. They "call" his pitches as easily as calling a license number, and lay back and wait for their favorite. Yet Joe Glump, who never saw the inside of a schoolroom, is apt to learn the trick of hiding his pitches at the first asking.

Cunningham Beats Fenske With Ease

Borican, Conquerer Last in Mile Race At Boston Armory

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Feb. 22.—Glenn Cunningham proved he was still the greatest miler of them all by defeating Chuck Fenske, former Wisconsin star, by two yards in a five-man race that found his recent "1,000" conqueror, John Borican, in last place tonight in the Veterans of Foreign Wars Invitation mile at the East Armory. Cunningham was clocked in 4:15.5.

For the second time in three nights, Tommy Deckard, former Indiana star, showed the way home to Don Lash, his fellow Hoosier and world indoor record maker, in a 2-mile race. Deckard won by a yard in 9:13.4, about 48-hours after he trounced Lash by 200 yards in 9:15.2 at Newark, N. J.

After sparring with Lash in a five-man field for six laps, Deckard forged ahead of his two-time victim, as the veteran Joe McCluskey trailed in third place, his finishing berth.

Deckard set the pace for the next 12 turns around the 12-lap track, with McCluskey and Lash at his heels and a yard apart. By that time the other two starters, Ray Underwood, of Boston College, and Ellison (Tarzan) Brown, the 1936 Boston Marathon victor, were hopelessly outclassed.

Lash made three determined bids during the last half-mile. He jumped from third to first on the nineteenth lap, only to surrender the lead to the sprinting McCluskey. As they fought each other for another lap, Deckard laid back to third place, gathering the burst that swept him past both of his rivals on next to the last lap.

Tommy was about 3 yards in front when he got the gun and the report spurred Lash into another desperate sprint. It carried him past McCluskey, but Deckard refused to yield an inch of the yard margin he had when they pounded off the final turn and fought down the flat to finish line.

Louisiana Ties Columbus U. Boxers, 4-4

Keady's Triumph in Heavyweight Go Keeps Locals Undefeated

Although extended to the limit by a tough band of mittenmen from Louisiana Tech, Columbus University closed out an unbeaten boxing season last night when Andrew Keady scored a unanimous decision in the heavyweight class to gain the Explorers a 4-to-4 draw.

Twelve hundred fans watched the visitors from The Citadel, S. C., spoil Columbus' undefeated string of victories in the very first bout on the card and take a 2-to-0 lead minutes later before the hard-hitting Explorers fought back to deadlock the count at 3-to-3, and then save their record with a split in the final two engagements.

Three T. K. O.'s

Three technical knockouts enlivened the card, one of the best of the local collegiate season. Buddy Lazear, Columbus' sensational 135-pounder, registered his quickest kayo of the campaign when he flatted Tech's highly touted Edward Wiley in 25 seconds of the first round with a terrific right hand to the stomach.

In the other bouts which failed to go the limit of three rounds, Joseph Wojecki, brother of Edward Wojecki Louisiana coach, was given the victory over Columbus's Philip Appel after 1 minute and 20 seconds of the third round, and Columbus' Bert Parod beat Guy Carroll to the canvas with a two-fisted attack in 1 minute and 50 seconds of the third.

Keady Triumphs

Keady came back to triumph over Bartlemay after getting off the floor in the first round where he landed after a half push half blow by his heavier opponent. From there on in, however, it was all Keady as he outboxed his foe, and scored repeatedly with rights and lefts to the body, especially in the in-fighting.

Louisiana Tech's entire squad, incidentally, proved weak at that department and Columbus was quick to capitalize on it. Parod finished his poponent, a converted southpaw, as soon as he realized the Techman couldn't hit him if he stayed in close.

That same discovery considerably helped William Crum who was given an unanimous verdict over

DeWitt, Knepley and Johnson Play Only in Second Half; 3,000 Watch Game

By Jack Munhall.

Coach Burt Shipley, of Maryland University, observed celebration of the birthday of the Nation's first President yesterday by withholding without explanation his three best players for more than one-half of the long-awaited basketball game with George Washington and presenting the Colonials with a 37-34 "gift" victory.

Three thousand rabid fans, most of whom paid $1 for the privilege of watching the first athletic engagement in ten years between the keen local rivals were the victims of the surprise party and the unscheduled birthday "present." And they showed their displeasure by exercising the right of all cash customers—they booed long and lustily, yelling "We want DeWitt," and "Put in the regulars, Maryland."

The fans went to Tech gym expecting a point-for-point battle between the high-powered Colonials and but slightly less regarded Maryland team. They went to Tech gym also to watch the continuation of a thrilling, nip-and-tuck scoring race between G. W.'s captain and great player, Bob Faris, and Maryland's sensational sophomore George DeWitt.

No Explanation

Instead they saw an indifferent George Washington team toy for 23 minutes with a misfit collection of Terps, composed of two regulars and three substitutes. Not until George Washington was leading, 27-9, after three minutes of the second half did Shipley insert George Knepley, his captain, or DeWitt, or Eddie Johnson, another dangerous scorer, and one of the team's best defensive players.

George Washington at first showed plenty of pep and class, but as time wore on and its competition became increasingly worse it began to laze and was unable to turn on the steam again even when facing the regular Maryland team.

Coach Shipley offered no explanation for his strange action, and his players were unable to answer. Capt. Knepley said neither he, DeWitt or Johnson knew until game time that they were not to take their regular positions in the lineup. Maryland has not another game until the Southern Conference tournament, March 2-4.

The ballyhooed individual duel between Faris and DeWitt was a bigger flop than the game itself. Faris never suffered an "off-day"

Referee Lost; Johns Hopkins Bows to A. U.

It was a case of "referee, referee who's got the referee" at American University last night. The Eagles were at the half-way point in a game they took from Johns Hopkins by a 53-44 score. The rival teams were lined up for the second session and the officials did not return to the floor.

An investigation followed and it was determined that the janitor had inavertently locked them in a basement room. Referee Orrel Mitchell and Umpire Spider Chase finally returned to the playing floor and the show went on.

The game was a thriller most of the way with the score tied six times before American U. pulled to the front and was never headed thereafter. As far as could be learned last night, this was the first victory for American U. over a Johns Hopkins five.

Nationals' New Hurler Arrives Today

Griffmen Excited Over Tales of S. A. Curve Ball Pitcher

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 22.—The Washington training camp, otherwise known as the International School of Baseball, which already numbers three Cubans and a Canadian on the rolls, will take on a South American flavor on Friday.

On that day a Venezuelan pitcher is scheduled to put in his appearance at the Nats' camp and the Washington bosses are no little excited by tales of his prowess which have reached their ears.

Chief bearer of the tales of the South American's pitching feats and number one tub thumper is Joe Cambria, the ubuiquitous little scout for the Nats, who corralled the fellow a month ago in Havana and persuaded him to put his mark on a Washington contract.

Immigration Troubles

His name, incidentally, is Alejandro Carrasquel and he'd been in the Nats camp two weeks ago along with the Cuban contingent, but there was some difficulty with the immigration authorities. It seems that the Venezuelan was stumped by the literacy test and the Nats' headquarters in Washington were forced to pull a few political strings to facilitate his entry into the United States tomorrow.

He's a big fellow, a 6-footer. And according to Scout Joe Cambria, who is prone to exaggerate, he is no less than a finished pitcher at this writing. He's a right hander and this much is known: He was the leading pitcher in the Havana League last year.

Carrasquel, hereafter to be known as Al Alexander, says Cambria, who has conferred an American name on him, is not a fast-baller like Ortiz, but is chiefly a curve ball pitcher. That much is vouchsafed by Bobbie Estalella, who saw him pitch in Cuba, and in fact, played many games against him.

"Alexander—ooo—gude peetcher," says Estalella. "Ver-ry, ver-ry gude. He peetch curve hokay. Yes, fast ball, too. Beeg fellow. Strong, smart. Best peetcher in Cuba. I play with heem. He strike out Bobby. Ees gude peetcher, sure."

'We'll look him over, anyway,"

Xalapa Clown 2d; Impound Third With Porter's Mite Fourth; Winner Off Slowly

By the Associated Press.

Santa Anita Park, Los Angeles, Feb. 22.—Bowling over favorites and tradition with feminine disdain, Ciencia, a sprightly filly, flashed through the sunlight of Santa Anita Park today and captured the fifth running of the $50,000 added Santa Anita Derby.

Fifty thousand turf fans saw the filly, sent into the race by the famed King Ranch, of Texas, kick up her heels in the faces of her male rivals and cross the finish line five lengths in front of Mrs. Bessie Franzheim's Xalapa Clown.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Impound ran third, winner in a photo finish duel for the position with the favorite in the betting rings, W. E. Boeing's Porter's Mite.

Ciencia, daughter of Cohort and Science, was the first filly to triumph in the brief history of the Santa Anita 3-year-old feature, and Jockey Carroll Bierman received a thunderous ovation when he trotted her into the winner's circle.

$41,850 to Win

The victory was worth $41,850 in added money to Ciencia, while Xalapa Clown won $10,000, Impound, $5,000 and the mite picked up $2,500 fourth place money.

Fourteen candidates answered the post call, Vanderbilt having declared Race Riot out of the race at noon and Mrs. Albert Sabath scratching Say Judge, a long shot, shortly before race time.

Ciencia, timed in 1:50 3-5 for the mile and one furlong, paid her backers $19.80, $9 and $5.20. Xalapa Clown paid $11.60 and $6.60 and Impound $3.80.

Cienca, given a weight allowance of five pounds, saved her strength. She was the thirteenth getting away from the barrier, but began to move up at the half-mile pole

Medal to Top Scorer In A.A.U. Tournament

Sportsman to Honor Unlimited Class Star; Entry Blanks for Post Trophy Competition Available Tonight at Post and Boys Club

Those point-for-point court struggles, annually features of the District A. A. U. championship tournament sponsored by The Washington Post, will begin at the new Eastern High School gymnasium on March 6. But that is not the only news this morning for tournament players and tournament fans.

In addition to the Post trophies which go to the seven championship teams and the individual official A. A. U. gold medals, James Sprigman, Washington sportsman, is offering a special medal to the unlimited class player who makes the most points during the competition.

Among those who have won a Sprigman award in other years are Sammy Hook, former Eastern High star, and Jimmy Thompson, an ace at Western High before he shone on the court for the University of Pennsylvania.

The independent and league teams throughout the city and vicinity boast an assortment of star scorers, any one of which has a chance to take down the individual point-making prize and the glory that goes with it. Sharpen up your scoring eyes, you forwards, centers and guards and let's make this a thrilling race.

The Post basketball editor will keep score and the leading point-producers will be listed daily right along with the statistics on the big tournament.

Winfree Johnson, chairman of the A. A. U. basketball committee, said last night that the entry blanks will be available tonight after 6 o'clock at The Washington Post Sports Department and at the Boys Club. Third and C streets northwest. Individual A. A. U. registration blanks also will be available at those two points for players who do not already possess the necessary eligibility cards.

Galento Bout Postponed

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Feb. 22.—Fulfillment of rotund Tony Galento's promise to knock Abe Feldman kicking was delayed at least temporarily today when their heavyweight scrap was postponed until tomorrow night because of threatening weather.

Two hours after the fighters had weighed in, Promoter George R. K. Carter looked at the overcast sky and decided to put off the bout. The weatherman had predicted fair and cooler weather after a few showers this morning.

Navy Cagers Rout Loyola

Annapolis, Feb. 22.—The Navy, playing its last game of basketball before meeting the Army, had no difficulty in winning, 53 to 35, from Loyola, of Baltimore, here this afternoon, although it lacked the services of rangy George Ghesquiere, center and high pointmaker so far this season. He is nursing a sprained ankle, but should be in shape to meet the Soldiers here this Saturday.

Joe Hanley, one of the three District of Columbia boys who played with the Navy team, played center, while Walter Shaffer filled Hanley's place at guard. Hanley was in good form and his 11 points, scored on four floor goals and two successes from the line, was high for the Middies and tied Stakem, visiting guard, for high game honors.

Macaulay Scratched

Exarch Equals Track Record in Dinner Stakes at Hialeah

2d Division Of Race Won By Marogay

Stroube Colt Clocked in .33, Pays $16.20; 13,000 See Juveniles In Twin Features

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 22.—Exarch, a bay son of Greenock flying the silks of Mrs. W. C. Stroube, wife of the Corsicanna, Tex., oil and cattle man, today equalled the track record of :33 flat for 3 furlongs when he drove to a half length victory in the ladies' division of the first Miami Jockey Club dinner stakes. Mrs. Payne Witney's Red Dock was second, a length before Mrs. P. A. B. Widener's Drury Lane, which ran coupled with Welding. Exarch, which Mrs. Stroube leased from her husband for the event, had a strong wind behind him in his fast exhibition. He paid $16.20 for $2 and was ridden by Maurice Peters.

Some 13,000 fans, including Gov. Fred P. Cone, Mrs. Cone and a party of friends, braved a threat of rain to be on hand for the sporting and social event.

Exarch, now winner of two of his four starts, came within one-fifth of a second of Galley Slave's world record, established at Santa Anita January 27, 1938. He now shares the local mark along with Sally Shall and Recorder.

Exarch rushed into a length lead soon after a good start, with Red Dock and Drury Lane following, a length or so apart. Red Dock made a game try through the final drive but Exarch refused to "come back." Under powerful handling, Drury Lane easily beat the others.

Marogay, owned and bred by Russel A. Firestone, automobile tire manufacturer from Akron, Ohio, who has a winter home at Miami Beach, was a game winner of the Gentlemen's division of the Dinner Stakes. The Stimulus colt, second in his debut and a winner the following time, made it two straight by beating Melissa, leased by F. Ray Comstock, by a half length. Marogay finished the three furlongs in :33 2-5. He earned a net purse of $975 and paid favorite players $5 for $2.

Tonypandy, a $92.85-to-$1 shot leased by Gov. Cone for the event, ran as his odds would indicate.

COLOR SALUTE, pinched back going to the first turn, swung around the field midway around the first turn, moved into contention rapidly and made a bold bid entering the stretch, but faltered in the final drive. OUR TEDDY raced into tight quarters entering the stretch. COUNTRY LASS could never improve position.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PANORAMA, $3.90, $3.30, $2.80; WINGED VICTORY, $9.50, $4.80; VIRGINIA BOY, $4.60.

PANORAMA, in near pursuit in the early stages, responded gamely to pressure in the final furlong and drew out at the end. WINGED VICTORY, rushed to the front, displayed good speed while saving ground, but faltered through the stretch and just managed to outlast VIRGINIA BOY. The latter, slow to get going, finished gamely to punishment and would have been second in another stride. MOUJIK had no excuses.

Daily Double, Brilliant Rock and Panorama, Paid $234.40.

THIRD RACE—Three furlongs (nursery course). Purse, $1,000 added. The Miami Jockey Club Dinner Stakes, lady subscribers. For 2-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Two-dollar mutuels paid—EXARCH, $16.20, $7.00, $4.10; RED DOCK, $4.30, $3.20; DRURY LANE (entry), $2.70.

EXARCH, acting kindly at the post, broke fast, displayed keen speed under a hustling ride and held RED DOCK safe in the final drive. RED DOCK, off forwardly, went in nearest pursuit of the winner all the way, but was unable to better his position. DRURY LANE broke toward the outside at the start, moved up gamely when straightened out, but was unable to overhaul the leaders. MAETRAN, hard ridden the entire trip, held on well in the final drive. A strong wind blew behind the field the entire trip.

FOURTH RACE—Three furlongs (nursery course). Purse, $1,000 added. The Miami Jockey Club Dinner Stakes, gentlemen subscribers. For 2-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAROGAY, $5.00, $3.80, $2.90; MELISSA, $10.90, $5.60; PREDICATE, $3.40.

MAROGAY broke forwardly, but was inclined to loaf and had to be strongly urged in the early stages, took command at the furlong pole, responded gamely to punishment and held MELISSA safe in the final drive. MELISSA moved up swiftly on the outside after crossing to the main track, made game effort, but could not get up. PREDICATE broke unduly, but made up a lot of ground through the stretch and wore MAEACE down in the last stride. MAEACE got going rapidly, assumed brief lead, but faltered in the stretch run. A strong wind blew behind the field the entire trip.

FIFTH RACE—Seven furlongs. Purse, $1,100. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:19. Off 4:24½. Winner, N. Clyman's b. h. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SARGAZO, $64.50, $28.30, $10.80; SAUNDERSTOWN, $9.30, $6.20; XAVIER, $12.70.

SARGAZO, racing in greatly improved form, followed the pace under light restraint until well straightened into the stretch, where he bore out slightly coming into the stretch, but quickly shook off SAUNDERSTOWN to win with speed in reserve. SAUNDERSTOWN, quickest to begin, set a fast early pace, but weakened in the final furlong. XAVIER worked his way up gradually while saving ground and outlasted WARLAINE in the final drive. WARLAINE broke forwardly from outside the stalls and went well up the entire trip. BLIND PIG quit badly after showing early speed.

SIXTH RACE—Seven furlongs. Purse, $1,400. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post 4:51. Off 4:51½. Winner, Greentree Stable's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ARMOR BEARER, $10.50, $3.90, $3.40; WISE PRINCE, $3.10, $2.50; BAR FLY, $3.60.

ARMOR BEARER, well handled and going in nearest pursuit of the leader throughout, assumed command with a rush entering the stretch, but was ridden out vigorously to maintain his lead through the stretch. WISE PRINCE showed good speed, but was pocketed on the inside until straightened into the stretch, where he came through between the leaders as the last three-sixteenths and outlasted BAR FLY. The latter, a prominent contender on the outside all the way, closed with good courage under punishment. MAERIEL, outrun in the early stages, finished stoutly while saving ground on the inside.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-half miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:20. Off 5:21. Winner, W. Two-dollar mutuels paid—KIEVEX, $6.10, $3.30, $2.90; CAUGHT, $3.30, $2.70; RITZ BROTHERS, $3.90.

KIEVEX, a distant trailer the first mile, began to move up on the extreme outside midway around the last turn and closing with a determined rush through the stretch, disposed of the leaders in the final 50 yards. CAUGHT held his opposition safe for speed, was rated in front under stout restraint while saving ground, continued gamely when placed to pressure and outlasted RITZ BROTHERS. The latter went well up all the way, responded gamely to punishment, but was unable to improve his position. GLASBY moved up with a bold challenge on the stretch turn, but hung.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles (on the turf). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:51. Off 5:53. Winner, J. WHITE HOT, slow to get going, gradually improved his position on the extreme outside in the final three furlongs and, responding gamely to punishment, got up in the last stride. ODDESA LAD held the field safe for speed and was rated in front while saving ground, but faltered in the final drive. HAZEL NUT, prominent all the way, continued gamely under punishment and held MY WO safe. FIGHT BACK saved ground early, but could not get up.

Ossabaw, owned by Louis B. Mayer, was the public choice in Tuesday's feature at Santa Anita. The former steeplechase horse was so anxious to run that he bolted out of the gate before the bell rang and ran away for a mile and a quarter. In the photo above, "Beans" Kennedy, the Santa Anita outrider, is running a poor second aboard a lead pony as he attempted to catch Ossabaw in the stretch

Bill Bennings

At The Post

Hialeah Park, Feb. 22.

Deal Al: Clocker Mike is missing. After Nipponese blew his tenbuck note in the first race today, Mike disappeared. This probably is good news to the Benningites who have been trying to run down some of his horses of late. I'll have to check up on his bank roll, but I don't believe he could get very far with what he had left. He had threatened to take the dough and look for a crap game, but I'm rather inclined to believe that he has had it changed into nickels and is playing a slot machine. He has a waitress friend in Waycross, Ga., and he might have headed that way. But I won't worry about him until he has been gone a couple of days. The horse, Mass Formation, owned by Stuart Janney, jr., son of one of the officials of the Maryland Jockey Club at Pimlico, has developed knee trouble. J. Merryman Black, of Timonium, has charge of the colt and will ship him back to his Maryland farm. Lawrin, the Woolford Farm's Derby winner, leaves here next week to begin his career in the stud, replacing Insco, his sire, who died of blood poiso

Smacko, U. S. Horse, Upsets Jumpers at Ft. Myer Show

Ringmaster Second in Show Feature

Lightly Regarded Gelding Takes Army Event Over Top Field

By Anne Hagner.

Smacko, big brown gelding owned by the United States Government and ably piloted by Lieut. Charles McClelland, won the featured handy jumpers class over a tip field at Fort Myer's third indoor horse show last night.

The 7-year-old son of MacDonough, well-known thoroughbred sire, was scarcely considered in the race for the Fort Myer championship which will be awarded in the March show at the Army post, but last night's performance over a winding course indicated that Smacko cannot be overlooked when those championship points are finally counted up.

Ringmaster Second

Second to Smacko was Ringmaster, flashy bay gelding that Fred Hughes salvaged from the auction of Tim McCoy's circus horses last year. Ringmaster was ignored by many District horsemen because of a bad knee, but Hughes heard of the high jumping done by the horse while a circus performer and bought him. Rest and care cured the knee and Ringmaster is now rounding into top form. Last night's ribbon was the first he has won, but experts predict a brilliant future for him.

A big audience of horse enthusiasts registered great interest in the event for student team jumping, won by Pennsylvania Military College, of Chester, Pa. Excellent performances by all four of the team's members keep Pennsylvania on top in the students' championship battle, with 8 faults last night making a total of 21 faults for the two shows which have counted in the race.

Jinwich Scores

Second was Arlington Hall's No. 1 team, with eleven faults added to the 17½ points of the December show, in which they also placed second.

Rocksie, Margaret Cotter's great-going bay horse and a point-winner in both hunter and open jumper events, almost annexed another blue in the ladies hunters class, but finally placed second to Maj. Gen. Leon B. Kromer's Jinwich, ridden by Jane Kromer. Jinwich, 11, has been winning hunter ribbons since he was a 3-year-old, by virtue of his careful, distance-judging stride, and turned in one of his typically steady performances to win this class.

Near Sweep

The Army almost scored a clean sweep in the open hunters' class, with 3 out of 4 ribbons going service-ward. Col. George S. Patton, commanding officer of the post, won with his easy-striding Red Fox, and his Hawaiian-bred Keanakolu annexed the fourth. James Hechtor, English-riding Baltimore horseman, won the red ribbon with Reliance to give the civilian forces recognition.

A big disappointment to spectators was the absence of Billy Do, recently bought by Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh, of Berryville, Va., from Capt. Henri Luebberman, of Fort Myer. Billy Do had earned several points for both the hunter and open jumping championships in the December show and stood a good chance to repeat last night. However, an illness in Mrs. Greenhalgh's family prevented her appearance and Capt. Luebberman scratched the horse in the classes in which he was entered.

Class 1.—Student team jumping—Won by Pennsylvania Military College: Cadet Horan on Air Flight, Cadet Lynch on Safety Flight, Cadet Sedley on Domino, Cadet Griffith on Tex; second, Arlington Hall team No. 1: Sally Seward on Royal Barton, Elinor Leh on King Rock, Virginia Smith on Gone With the Wind, Louise Goldins on Kismet; third, Arlington Hall team No. 2, Betty Johnson on High Test, Caroline Hoehler on Scioto, Phoebe Tolhelm on Madam Boo, Jean Holden on Colonel; fourth: Gunston Hall, Ellie Wood Keith on Primervera, Mary Kathryn Willis on Col. Harbison, Anne Titus on Easy Money, Jane Wells on Lumber Jack.

Class 2.—Handy jumpers—Won by Smacko, owned by the United States Government and ridden by Lieut. Charles McClelland; second, Ringmaster, owned and ridden by Fred J. Hughes; third, Eyes Delight, owned by the United States Government and ridden by Lieut. C. B. Hines; fourth, Chance Me, owned and ridden by Lieut. Charles McClelland.

Class 3.—Ladies hunters—Won by Jinwich, owned by Maj. Gen. Leon B. Kromer and ridden by Jane Kromer; second, Rocksie, owned and ridden by Margaret Cotter; third, Bumper, owned by the United States Government and ridden by Mrs. C. B. Hines; fourth, Primervera, owned and ridden by Ellie Wood Keith.

Class 4.—Family hack class—Won by Capt. Thomas Donaldson and family on Blue Bonnet, Grey Dawn, Marion, and Brave Rifles; second, Capt. L. G. Smith and family on Clatter Mouth, Silly Chatter, Sultan of Muscat, and Delight; third, Mrs. N. H. McDowell and Miss Elaine McDowell on Modern Melody and Gay Melody; fourth, Mrs. S. M. Keith, and Miss Ellie Wood Keith on Primervera and Big Tip.

Class 5.—Open hunters—Won by Red Fox, owned and ridden by Col. George Patton; second, Reliance, owned and ridden by James W. Hechtor; third, Jinwich, owned by Maj. Gen. Leon B. Kromer and ridden by Miss Jane Kromer; fourth, Keanakolu, owned by Col. George S. Patton and ridden by Miss Ruth Ellen Patton.

to equal that of yesterday. The ordinarily sharpshooting senior took shot after shot at the basket and only twice did he score from the floor. DeWitt had little chance, playing, as he did, only the last 10 minutes. He did manage, however, to convert the only foul chance he received and total one point to Faris' four.

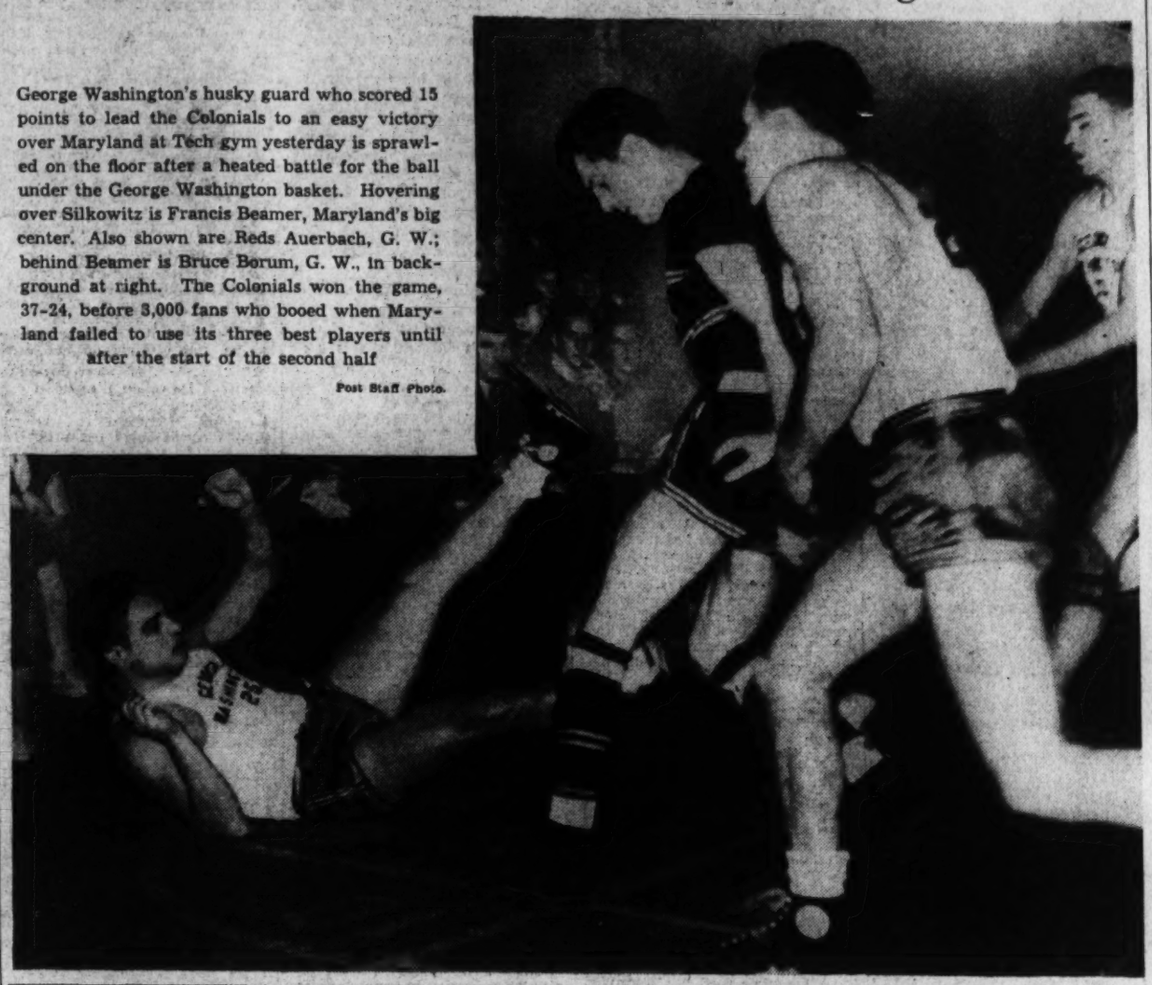
Sid Silkowitz, G. W. Star, Takes Tumble in Rough Melee



George Washington's husky guard who scored 15 points to lead the Colonials to an easy victory over Maryland at Tech gym yesterday is sprawled on the floor after a heated battle for the ball under the George Washington basket. Hovering over Silkowitz is Francis Beamer, Maryland's big center. Also shown are Reds Auerbach, G. W.; behind Beamer is Bruce Borum, G. W., in background at right. The Colonials won the game, 37-24, before 3,000 fans who booed when Maryland failed to use its three best players until after the start of the second half

Tech's Quintet Bows, 41-29, At Petersburg

Capital Five Gets Lead In Second Period, But Foes Draw Away Again

Petersburg, Va., Feb. 22.—Unable to penetrate consistently the shifting zone defense employed by Petersburg High School, McKinley Tech's basketers from Washington, dropped a 41-29 decision here this afternoon.

Trailing 8-2 early in the first quarter, Tech came back with a late quarter drive that continued into the second stanza and finally went ahead at 15-14 on Bob Kelley's second two-pointer. Capt. Vic Deleon chimed in with two clever shots to aid the rally.

Western Beats B. C. C. Five Again, 22-19

Schenker's Free Toss And Dwyer's Goal Brings Victory

Western High School scored its second win over Bethesda-Chevy Chase this season, by turning back the suburban team, 22 to 19, yesterday on the losers' floor. The teams were deadlocked with three minutes to go, when Western's Schenker sank a free toss and Dwyer made good a shot under the basket to give the Red Raiders the victory.

Bethesda-Chevy Chase led throughout most of the game and it wasn't until the closing minutes that Western put on its belated rally. At halftime, Western was behind, 11-10. The boys from "across the creek" were paced by Capt. Bob Holloran, who scored 8 points. The polished floor work of Western's Horn was outstanding.

Johnny Shumate was the spearhead of attack for the Bethesda-Chevy Chase five. The zone defense of the suburbanites held Western in check for the first three periods of the game, but a lapse in the last chukker of play allowed Western to register its win.

Tech, Central Clash for Place In Cage Tourney

Whether Tech's basketball team was playing over its head when it whipped Woodrow Wilson and St. John's in its last two starts will be settled this afternoon at Eastern gym, when the Mighty Midgets come face-to-face with Central, at 3:45.

To the winner fill go the fourth place in public school standings that means a berth in the championship tourney tomorrow and Saturday.

It will be Central's second stab at the valuable place, the up-and-down Mount Pleasanters having been beaten out of it Tuesday by Roosevelt. The three teams were forced into the playoff when they wound up the regular schedule in a three-way tie for two of the four championship places.

Catholic U., La Salle Play Tonight

Only Dish Remaining On This Week's Basketball Menu

Catholic University's engagement with LaSalle College at Brookland gym tonight at 8:15 o'clock is the next and only major college basketball attraction for local fans this week.

Georgetown, however, will hold considerable interest as it makes its last road trip of the campaign to meet Temple in an Eastern Conference game, at Philadelphia, tomorrow night and Yale, at New Haven, Saturday night. A victory over Temple would definitely clinch the conference championship for Georgetown.

The other two games on the schedule for the remainder of the week involve American University which will play host to Bridgewater College tomorrow night and Juanita on Saturday night. Both games are carded for 8:30 o'clock.

St. John's Prep And Gonzaga Clash Tonight

Victory Will Give Johnnies Possession Of Catholic Prep Title

The color and drama that annually accompanies any athletic encounter between St. John's Prep and its bitterest rival, Gonzaga, will be renewed tonight at Tech, starting at 8:15, as the teams square off for their second basketball meeting this season.

Because the Purple lagged in the opening half of the previous encounter, finding itself too far behind to catch up when catching up was most important, it goes into the game tonight in the underdog position. St. John's becomes sole possessor of the Catholic Prep basketball title if it wins, but a play-off for the coveted crown will be in order if Gonzaga upsets the dope and wins.

The hopes of Purple fans for a victory over the rampaging Johnnies were recently raised by the return of Lane O'Donnell, veteran center, to the Gonzaga squad. O'Donnell was unable to report for practice until after the first Johnny clash, due to a run-down condition which the school physician believed necessitated rest. His height and ability under the basket were missed against St. John's.

Class 'A' And Junior To Old Line

Georgetown Winner In Class 'B' Race; Laughead Individual Star of Competition

Bob Laughead, a Maryland University junior who admits he is a "sucker" at a 10-cent shooting gallery, carried off individual honors yesterday in the District of Columbia rifle championships contested at the National Guard Armory under the sponsorship of the Headquarters United States Marine Corps Rifle Club.

Laughead, a smiling red-haired youth, at the anchor position on the Maryland University team, led his combination to the Class A title in a field that included 14 teams. He contributed 100 prone, 96 kneeling and 85 standing for a total of 281 and helped the Old Liners produce a 1,367 total to take the title by four points.

National Guard Second

The District National Guard No. 1 team finished in second position with a 1,363 total with the Fifth United States Marine Corps Reserves getting 1,359 for third place. The Marine Barracks (Navy Yard) was fourth with 1,353.

College riflists also won titles in two other classes. Maryland University added to the Class A crown a victory by its freshmen who scored 1,293 to finish ahead of Tech High's 1,278 and Georgetown's 1,228.

Georgetown gathered the Class B laurels with 1,275 to 1,231 for the Columbia Rod and Gun Club and 1,201 for the Maryland University team.

John C. Oehman, Tech High, took the individual scoring honors for the juniors with a card of 97, 98, 80 for a 275 total. Enos Ray, of Maryland University, was high gun in the Class B competition with 96, 90, 84 for a 270 total.

Merton Darnett in the 165-pound class.

Robert Hand, Louisiana Tech's undefeated 127-pounder, was the most impressive of the hard-hitting Southern team which was recording its second tie against as many victories and the same number of losses. A clever boxer and stiff puncher, Hand softened up Columbus' Leo Marcopolis slowly but surely and had him groggy at the finish of a fast bout.

Lou Hayman, Columbus' glass-chinned 175-pounder, had a real chance to give his team a 5-3 victory, but after setting a fast pace in the second, weakened and allowed Rip Pipes to take a close majority decision. Hayman's loss was shiefly due to his knockdown in the first round when Pipes landed what seemed a very light right which Hayman took on his chin going away.

Fawsett Wins Feature Event In D. C. Shoot

Local marksmen dominated the Washington Gun Club's annual shotgun target shoot yesterday as fair weather aided the scores.

C. C. Fawsett and Kelly Wynkoop, both Washington Club members, were first and second in the feature event, the 100-target match, with 89 and 88.

The Class A trophy in the same event went to C. Spainhour, of Chicago, who smashed 87. H. M. Bingham, of Washington, won the Class B trophy, with 81, and T. R. Crum, another local man, the Class C trophy with the same score.

The next attraction at the Washington Gun Club range will be its weekly Lewis class target shoot on Saturday.

O'Toole Meets Pencheff on Mat Tonight

George Pencheff, the Australian mat champion, will be shooting for a crack at Jim Londos and the Golden Terror tonight when he meets Tommy O'Toole in the feature match at Turner's arena.

Handsome Tommy, pride of the Irish fans, twice has given Londos hard tussels in bouts at the arena. His two encounters with the Greek were the only two matches O'Toole has lost in five appearances here in main roles.

Pencheff brings with him a reputation as a fast and scientific wrestler and according to Turner should be able to extend either O'Toole or Londos to the limit. For a change the main encounter at the W street wrestle parlors should be a clean affair as O'Toole also depends on science rather than brute strength for his victories.

Tonight's card, however, offers two desperados—Bibber McCoy and Ed Newman—in the semi-windup. McCoy lost a bruising session to the Golden Terror last week, but wants a re-match. Sandor Szabo, a big drawing card a few years back, will make his 1939 debut in an added attraction against Nanjo Singh. Other bouts show Bebe Zaharias against Rube Wright and Vincent Austeri against Jack Hader, the villain de luxe. First bout at 8:30.

said Bucky Harris. "If he's half the pitcher Cambria says he is, he must be a wonder. This team isn't passing up anybody who can pitch. And it sounds as if we won't have to teach Alexander so much. That, in itself, will be a relief after the way we've been struggling with the other rookies, specially the Cubans."

An unseasonable chill in the air and a high wind cut short the Nats workout today, with Harris shooing the twenty-odd rookies to the clubhouse after little more than an hour's workout. But the tutoring of the Cuban fast-baller, Roberto Ortiz, went on apace.

Ortiz Improving

Catcher Al Lopez, of the Bees, special coach of Ortiz, continued to impress upon the Cuban the necessity of getting the force of his body into his delivery as well as his arm. And Ortiz has proven himself apt at it. At the end of the workout today, Lopez was high in his praise of the Cuban.

"There has been a remarkable improvement in his style in three days," said Lopez. "He's quick to learn and he's eager. At the rate he's progressing he can be quite a pitcher by the time the season opens, and he'll improve steadily after that. With an arm like he has there's unlimited possibilities. I don't blame Mr. Grimith and Bucky for getting excited about him.

Steel Activity Declines to 54% Capacity

Advance in Scrap Prices Points to an Upward Trend

New York, Feb. 22.—Although steel ingot production this week has dipped a point to 54 per cent of the industry's capacity the strength of steel scrap prices seems to point to an early resumption of an upward trend, says Iron Age today in its weekly survey of the steel industry.

"While the trend of steel buying in February has not been uniformly upward, several important products have registered gains over the January volume. In all probability the declines in operations which have occurred this week in several districts are not so much a reflection of poor steel business as an indication of over-anticipation by some steel companies, which have built up larger stocks of raw and finished steel than are currently required.

"Caution marks the buying policies of all steel users, as it has for some time, but the orders being received by the mills are numerous, indicating a broadening of activity. Sheet and strip business suffers by reason of the lean buying in the automobile industry and the fairly large stocks carried over by a good many consumers and jobbers from the heavy shipments brought about by last fall's low-price coverages.

"Meanwhile, the automobile manufacturers continue to gauge their production schedules to actual orders in hand, and they are buying steel in the same manner. The steel trade expects larger orders for automobile steels next month. As stocks of finished cars are low, the expected spring rise in automobile sales will be quickly reflected in assemblies.

"Railroad buying is still one of the major factors of current interest. The New York Central will buy 50,000 tons or more of rails and several thousand tons of accessories, the Chicago & Northwestern will buy 20,000 tons of rails, and the Chicago & Eastern Illinois has ordered 3,750 tons from Chicago mills. The Milwaukee road has approved a budget of $11,000,000 to provide for numerous betterments. The Union Pacific has distributed orders for parts for 2,000 cars it will build in its own shops. The Illinois Central will soon buy 1,000 hopper cars, the Chicago & Northwestern expects to buy 900 cars and the Santa Fe will rebuild 500 refrigerator cars in its own shops.

"Although general price advances for second quarter are held to be very unlikely either in steel or pig iron, there are further indications that weak spots which have arisen largely in secondary steel markets will be strengthened. An outright advance of $2 a ton on barbed wire has been announced."

The Federal Trade Commission will present to the Monopoly Investigating Committee next week a study of trade practices and a review of its experience in enforcement of the Clayton anti-trust act.

Stock Prices Are Irregular At London

However, United States Issues Hold Steady

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 22.—Stock exchange quotations were quietly irregular today following Prime Minister Chamberlain's speech in the House of Commons last night in which he hinted at further borrowing for armaments. The speech made market operators cautious and checked the recent upswing of British government bonds and industrial stocks while speculators retreated with their profits.

Despite the Washington's Birthday holiday in Wall Street, transatlantic stocks held steady, but other speculative issues, including oils and gold mines, lost an early improvement under selling from the continent.

Copper shares closed weaker despite the reduction in export quotas. British railways benefited from better traffic returns which induced investment buying. The market for foreign exchange was as quiet as that for stocks and bonds.

About £439,000 (approximately $2,058,910) in gold was sold at 148 shillings, 4 per cent (34.77) a fine ounce, a decline of ½ penny from yesterday. At the time of the gold price fixing, the pound was valued at $4.68¾.

Active American issues closed as follows (in American equivalents at 4.68 13-16 to the pound):

Testimony Ends In 2d Hines Trial

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 22.—Testimony in the second conspiracy trial of James J. Hines, Tammany district leader—accused of having acted as the hired political protector of the old Dutch Schultz policy numbers syndicate—was ended today.

The politician's counsel was expected to take all day tomorrow in summations; the State's arguments will follow, and Judge Charles C. Nott, jr., will charge the jury Saturday.

Former District Attorney William Dodge testified today that he had known that "thousands of dollars" for his 1932 campaign had come from Hines, but roared "no!" when Dewey asked him if he hadn't held office "by grace of gangster money."

Two Members Of Junior Board To Fight It Out

The Junior Board of Commerce yesterday split into two camps as two of the board's leading sluggers agreed to flail it out Tuesday in a grudge match at the Y. M. C. A. for the heavyweight title.

In one corner will be the "Red-Headed Bomber," Howard de Franceaux, insurance broker, whose handsome countenance is said by board officers to irk one "Hammering" Larry Gichner, president of the Gichner Iron Works, to such a point that he wishes to hang one on the "Bomber."

Members of the board will sit around the training table today at 12:15 p. m. at their luncheon in the Annapolis Hotel, and talk things over. Judge Edward Curran has been named referee. Robert Wilson, treasurer of Potomac Electric Power Co., and Wilson P. Kilgore will be judges. Refreshments will be served ringside fans while the "Bomber" and "Hammering Larry" maneuver at safe distances in the ring.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The Four Aces, who are always doing unexpected things, have developed Kard-Jong, a stream-lined version of Mah-Jong, played with cards. Much of the tedious counting of hands is eliminated, they say, and the mathematically minded Ossie Jacoby has devised a key by which the various hands can be easily recognized. One hundred and forty-four cards make up the Kard-Jong pack.

However fickle may be the likes of women, who flit from Mah-Jong to contract and back again, men will never desert the rugged game of contract for anything that concerns "winds" and "flowers." John H. Edwards, former assistant secretary of the Treasury, is a typical man's bridge player. He is daring in his bidding, cautious and artful in his play.

Today's hand shows his nice technique in the management of the dummy, and the wise way in which he insured his three no trump bid. He ducked the first round of dummy's long suit, though he had a sure re-entry, to provide against a bad split. It developed that his fears were fully justified, the cards were bunched against him, and had he not taken the precaution of ducking the contract would have been defeated.

This is how he played it: West led his fourth best heart, the deuce, Mr. Edwards played low from dummy, East put up the ten, and the ace in the close hand won. A low club was led, West played the six, declarer put on the eight from dummy, and he was not at all surprised when the eight held the trick. The only card outstanding lower than the six was the deuce and if West were not false-carding, East must have it, probably alone.

After winning the club trick, Edwards took the ace, king and gave up a third round to West. A shift to spades was made but it was too late. The spade ace won, and the king of hearts allowed declarer to cash the remaining two club tricks. South made three no trump, winning five clubs, two hearts, a spade, and a diamond.

Had declarer failed to duck the first club trick, he would have hit the rocks. West would simply put up an honor on the next lead, and declarer would be helpless. It would not pay him to duck now, for he lacked a third club with which to finesse. If he took West's honor with his remaining ace or king, West would have a tenace over him in the queen nine which would prevent him from running the suit. The clubs would be blocked, and the contract lost.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

THE Old Records Division, Adjutant General's Office, has lost the services of Louis A. Rosafy, the chief clerk, and probably the oldest Federal employe in point of years served. With 55 years to his credit, he left there yesterday to spend retirement, as he says, with the three R's, reading, 'riting and roaming.

His fellow workers gave him a 17-jewel watch, which he liked, and a testimonial signed by 400 of his friends, a tribute that moved him. They got up a formal testimonial, which stated, in part:

"Most of us who have regarded, Mr. Rosafy as a permanent fixture of the A. G. O. can hardly appreciate just how permanent he has been as a Government employe. From available information, he is today probably the oldest employe, in length of service—55 years—certainly a lifetime of effort for the Government."

In 1884, when 15 years old, Rosafy was appointed a page in the United States Senate through the influence of his father, a political exile from Hungary, who had distinguished himself as a captain in the Union Army during the Civil War. Only once in the Senate did Rosafy balk at duty—and then in a dubious case by refusing to retrieve from a cuspidor a nickel dropped there by a Republican Senator.

After serving there six years, he accepted a clerkship with the Census Bureau; and after two years there joined the Adjutant General's Office, December 4, 1891, as copyist, and was assigned to the record and pension division.

Since then, he has served continuously in the A. G. O. as chief of the prisoner of war division, the correspondence division, and the selective service division before his assignment to the old records division.

". . . all things else were subordinated to his Government service. His education which includes graduation from high school and a law degree from Columbian University (now George Washington University), was obtained outside of working hours. Even as a page he attended school between sessions of Congress . . ." says the testimonial.

Officially, he leaves the service on March 31, but accumulated leave allows him the earlier departure. During his last days at the desk, many of his friends visited to say a personal good-by. This informal manner was suggested by Rosafy himself. He urged against any formal leave-taking. His friends, he said, should tell him good-by either at his desk or home, 2852 Woodley place northwest.

NOTES: The need for that long-talked about court of appeals for Federal employe grievances is illustrated at the moment by the dismissal in Agriculture of an employe who was given no chance to answer the charges made against him . . . Small things brighten the day, much as other morning in the A.G.O. when Miss Florence—came in wearing shoes that weren't mates nor even near matches, a situation she was unaware of . . . The carelessness of Americans generally in attending to their business struck home the other day at the notable Agriculture Department Graduate School. It had to throw away about 200 requests for catalogues because that many people neglected to give their addresses. And those same 200 people will probably squawk when no response comes to their requests for catalogues . . . Speaking a while ago of employe grievances and what is likely to be done about them, it appears that at the moment six bills have been introduced in Congress to create a civil service board to hear complaint cases. They provide three-man boards, four of the bills provide for Presidential appointment; two provide that one member be a representative of the Civil Service Commission, one a representative chosen by the employe or his representatives, and the third to be selected by the other two. The principal thing the employes want is a board of appeals completely removed from the scene of the difficulties and with final and absolute determining power. And another thought is that not nearly so many employes are interested in the proposed board of appeals as might be imagined.

Bob Burns Says—

People sure like to gamble! I see they arrested a man the other day for inventin' a new game to bet on. It's very simple. All you gotta do is pick a flock of phone numbers an' bet with somebody on each call you make, whether a man or woman is gonna answer. Now that's a right interestin' idea! But I think it ain't been developed far enough. If I was a-playin' that game, I'd ask odds on gettin' the wrong number. Say, there oughta be a chance to clean up on that one! An' then, there's a good gamblin' chance of not gettin' any answer at all. That oughta bring you nice odds.

Then you could play the game this way. You could bet that the person who answered would be somebody's mother-in-law. They might take your bet on that right off without stoppin' to think, an' you'd be almost a certain winner because it's been my experience that mothers-in-law get to the phone first an' answer more calls than anyone else! That's on account of their wantin' to be helpful an' incidentally to not miss out on anythin' that's going on! Yet, sir—the telephone's a wonderful invention. You can buy more hot air over it for a nickel than you can get out of a hot-air furnace with a cord of wood. Wanna bet?

Bedtime Story

By Thornton W. Burgess.

The Test

He is with courage truly blest
Who fears yet puts it to the test.
—Old Mother Nature.

It was still winter, the last part of it to be sure, but still winter. The Great Horned Owls, Hooty and Mrs. Hooty, had a nest. They had built it themselves, something very unusual for them. You see a hurricane had blown down all the old nests among which they might have found one to their liking. Now there were two eggs, two big rounded dull white eggs. They were not lovely eggs at all, but Mrs. Hooty thought they were. She thought they were the loveliest eggs that ever were laid. But she had thought that every year since she had laid her first eggs. They were thick-shelled and that was just as well, they thus afforded better protection for the baby Owls forming within them.

Hooty had been keeping those eggs covered while Mrs. Hooty was off hunting for a dinner. He had already had his. By and by she returned. She hadn't had much luck, hardly more than a bite to stay her hunger. But she couldn't stay away longer. She was uneasy.

"We are going to have a storm," said she. "I can feel it coming. It is going to be a bad one."

"I guess you are right," said Hooty as she took his place on the nest. "I don't like the signs. I hope it won't be too bad." He flew to a tall fir tree among the branches of which there would be protection from the wind and snow.

Already there was fine snow in the air. The wind was rising. That snow wasn't in soft flakes as it sometimes is. It was in tiny hard grains. Mrs. Hooty turned so that it would be on her back and not driven in her face. That nest was right out in the open, high up in a tall tree, with no protection whatever save the bare limbs that formed the crotch in which it was placed. Rough brother North Wind blew harder, driving the snow so that it hissed among the bare twigs of the tree.

Mrs. Hooty settled herself as low as possible in that nest with her back to the storm. It was rapidly becoming the worst storm of the winter, a blizzard. Night was closing down. She didn't mind this, for you know she is one of the night people. The snow whirled and swirled around her and was so dense that she could not have seen much beyond the edge of her nest had she opened her eyes. Wisely she kept them closed.

Just a little way off, a very little way, was that fir tree in which Hooty had sought shelter. She knew just about where he was. She knew he was not so high up but that the trunk of that tree was big enough to give him protection from Rough Brother North Wind. She knew that those broad green branches were catching the snow so that only a little sifted through. She knew that the more they held the less would get through, and so the less Rough Brother North Wind would be able to toss them about. She knew that it was not too bad in there where Hooty was, that it was almost comfortable. Let the storm do its worst, Hooty would have nothing to worry about. And she might be there with him instead of out here exposed to the worst that the storm could do.

Then she would feel those two precious eggs under her and would cuddle down closer. It took courage, a lot of courage, to stay there with Rough Brother North Wind shrieking louder and louder and the snow driving and hissing around her with increasing fury. Faintly she heard Hooty hoot. She knew it was for her. It helped. She didn't hoot back. She wouldn't lift her head for that. She merely tried to settle down a little flatter. Was she frightened? Of course she was frightened. Who wouldn't be in such a storm? This was the test of her courage. If she deserted those eggs and sought shelter in that fir tree those eggs would quickly chill. Then they would never hatch. So she remained at her post.

Senate Group Indorses Bill To Tax U.S. Pay

Finance Committee Action Spurs Plans For D. C. Income Levy

Proposals to establish an income tax for residents of the District of Columbia received impetus yesterday as a result of the Senate Finance Committee's action in indorsing a bill authorizing reciprocal taxation of the salaries of Federal, State and local employes. Senate approval of the bill is considered certain.

Reported favorably by a 14-3 committee vote, the reciprocal tax measure, which has already passed the House, permits States to tax salaries of employes of the Federal Government, and vice versa.

Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, chairman of a special Finance sub-committee studying the problem of tax-exemption, told The Post yesterday that when the bill becomes law, it will undoubtedly act as a spur to the movement for a District income tax.

States Could Tax

He pointed out that, under the bill, Federal employes who reside in Virginia or Maryland would be subject to the State income tax, even though they work in Washington.

He suggested that when this condition arises, Federal employes who not only work in the District but also live here would have little grounds for fighting the proposed District income tax—inasmuch as their colleagues who work in the same offices, but happen to reside in a neighboring State, would be subject to the local tax in that State. (Under the interpretation of the present law, salaries of Federal employes are exempt from State taxation.)

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the District Committee and proponent of a local income tax, indicated last night that he thought the new reciprocal tax bill—which will probably be law within two weeks—would increase the possibility of a District income tax.

180,000 Work for U. S. Here

Civil Service Commission figures show that approximately 180,000 Federal employes work in the Capital, but what proportion live in Washington, in Maryland or in Virginia could not be ascertained.

The three votes against the reciprocal tax bill in the Finance Committee yesterday were cast by Senators King, Radcliffe and Bailey, all Democrats. King explained his vote on the grounds that he doubted the constitutionality of the measure and feared its implications.

He declared "this is the entering wedge for taxation of municipal and State securities, and I'm not willing to let the Federal Government have the power to destroy the States by imposition of taxes on their securities."

Expects Report in April

Senator Brown, who had informed the full committee that his sub-committee favored the bill, said that its constitutionaliy was uncertain, but the Supreme Court has never passed upon this precise question. He said that there was "sufficient probability that the measure would be held constitutional to justify its enactment."

Brown, whose sub-committee is continuing hearings on the proposal to remove tax exemption from Governmental securities, said he thought the full report on the entire problem would not be completed until April.

Both the salary and securities tax proposals have Presidential approval but observers say it wil be much more difficult to obtain Congressional indorsement of the removal of tax exemption from securities than the authorization of reciprocal taxes on salaries.

300 Masons at Alexandria Hear Byrd Praise Washington

First President Was a Conservative Who Believed in the Profit Motive, Virginian Tells Birthday Celebrants

More than 300 Masons met yesterday with Alexandria-Washington Lodge to celebrate for the 137th time in its history the birthday of its most distinguished Grand Master, George Washington.

Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, at the banquet climaxing the celebration, described Washington as an "instinctive conservative" who "detested all demagogues and suspected the peddlers of political nostrums who promised too much." Though Washington fought against his king and helped his people win to a new form of government, Byrd said he was "free from 'isms' and a craze for new things merely because they were new."

Last night's banquet repeated that one, in 1799, at which George Washington responded to eulogies from Masons who were his neighbors. The following December he died at Mount Vernon, and the lodge continued to assemble in his memory every February 22, except for three years during the Civil War.

$60,000 for Memorial

Worshipful Master James Sherier presided last night and introduced distinguished guests. Among these, besides Senator Byrd, were Representative J. Thorkelson (Republican), of Montana; Judge Needham S. Turnbull, jr., Most Worshipful Grand Master of Masons in Virginia; Carl E. Herrick, of Liberty Lodge, Beverly, Mass., and Bryant Baker, of Constitution Lodge, Beverley, England.

Dallas G. Wiley received the past master's jewel. Gov. James H. Price, of Virginia, sent regrets at his inability to attend as scheduled.

Grand masters from jurisdictions throughout the United States learned, as part of the business conducted during the day, that last year only $60,000 was contributed toward completion of the Masonic Memorial atop Shooters Hill. The grand masters then journeyed to Mount Vernon to place a wreath at Washington's Tomb.

At a meeting in the Memorial, the George Washington Masonic National Memorial Association, its sponsors, elected Elmer R. Arn, of Dayton, Ohio, president.

Washington's Faith

The first President's political faith, Senator Byrd said at the banquet, was simple. It was based on the concept that every man had the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. He was, Byrd said, "a practical man, a square shooter and a man who spent less than he made."

"He believed profoundly in the right of the individual to acquire and legally to hold private property, and he never felt any occasion to apologize for a recognition of the profit motive as the mainspring of our business development."

Colored Elks Seek Hall for Dance in Vain

The grand lodge of colored Elks, sponsor of an annual Easter dance here, has been unable to obtain a hall, Perry W. Howard, grand legal adviser, said yesterday. He said the search would be continued.

Halls used in the past, including the Washington Auditorium, Masonic Temple at Tenth and U streets northwest, the dining hall at Howard University and certain school armories, have been given over to other purposes. Public halls previously available either are already engaged, he said, or are too small.

A.F.L. Warns Coal Operators To Drop C.I.O.

Denies Right of Lewis Organization to Make New Contracts

Jurisdictional clashes between the A. F. L. and the C. I. O. in two fields developed yesterday.

In one, the National Labor Relations Board ordered abrogation of the contract between the Mount Vernon Car Manufac ring Co., Mount Vernon, Ill., and the A. F. L.'s Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America.

In the other, the federation's Progressive Mines Workers of America sent notices to a number of coal mine operators not to renew their present contracts, expiring March 31, with the United Mines Workers of America, the backbone union of the C. I. O.

The labor board order represented a victory for the C. I. O. Some 1,000 employes are involved.

Closed Shop Attacked

The board announced it had ordered the Mount Vernon company to "cease encouraging membership in and to withdraw exclusive recognition from "the A. F. L. union" and "to cease giving effect to its closed-shop contract with the brotherhood."

The board said that until May, 1937, the company operated on an open-shop, nonunion basis, but that with word of C. I. O. organizational activities a group of employes petitioned for a union "to be locally controlled," and David C. Arthurs, company president, signed a contract with it. In June the local union, known as the United Car Builders, was taken over by the Carmen's Brotherhood and the company signed a closed shop contract with the brotherhood.

In the mine field, the John L. Lewis forces made light of the threat from the Progressive Mine Union, which recently became an affiliate of the A. F. L.

New Contract Due

Lewis and the Appalachian area operators are scheduled to meet March 14 in New York to work out a new contract.

In advance of the meeting, Joe Ozanic, president of the Progressive Mine Workers, has served formal notice on the operators of several States, including West Virginia, the largest producer, that his organization represents a majority of their employes and under the national labor relations act must be reorganized as the contracting agency.

Washington Coffin Unopened When Moved, Historian Says

1911 Interview Indicated Boy Saw First President's Face At Transferral of Casket in 1837

Whether John Lane, Washington bookseller, who died about 20 years ago, was the only person of the twentieth century ever to see George Washington in the flesh, agitated journalists and a historian yesterday, while honor was being done to the Father of his Country.

The question arose early this week when William Atherton Du Puy, Washington writer, of 2707 Adams Mill road northwest, told of interviewing John Lane in 1911. At that interview Lane told of being taken to Mount Vernon when Washington's body was transferred to the mausoleum in which it now rests. At that time, he claimed, he had looked on the face of the dead President.

Publication of this story led Joseph Reed, historian who writes "Last Week—a Hundred Years Ago" for The Washington Post, to point out that the leaden coffin in which the former President's body lay had never been opened. It was transferred from the family vault to the marble sarcophagus cut from a solid block of marble, 8 feet long, 3 feet wide and 2 feet 2 inches deep, that had been fashioned by John Struthers, of Philadelphia, marble mason, by whom it was presented to the family. The transferral was made on October 7, 1837, in the presence of members of the family, and the whole occurrence told in family papers now resting in the Congressional Library, Reed reports.

The question remaining unanswered yesterday was whether John Lane had seen what he said he saw, and the family records failed to mention the leaden coffin's having been opened; or whether the impressions of a young boy had evolved through the years into a definite belief that he had seen something that he had not really seen. This continued to be the state of the matter at the time of going to press.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

A. Conti-Berenguer presents Fay Ferguson in a piano recital in Phillips Memorial Gallery. Program of compositions by Chopin, Bach, Debussy, Faure, Griffes and Dohnanyi.

Appearing in the Art of Young America series, which has for its purpose the introduction to Washingtonians of talented native artists who are on the upward road, Fay Ferguson gave a piano recital last evening in the grateful setting of Phillips Memorial Gallery. A graduate of Cincinnati Conservatory, Miss Ferguson has had the further advantages of study in London and concert engagements abroad—experiences which are implicit in the poise and assurance of her keyboard manner.

One less confident in technique might have recoiled from the ordeal of presenting herself for judgment by playing an inadequate instrument. Through a misunderstanding, the piano was supposed to have been recently tuned and voiced, but the fact was unfortunately otherwise. Under these circumstances, Miss Ferguson could not do herself justice in matters of tonal coloring, and it was necessary to deduce her ability in dynamic finesse from her capable management of an unresponsive mechanism.

She has an excellent technical equipment and applies it intelligently. Her musical insight was manifested abundantly in her readings of a Chopin group consisting of eight Preludes, the Berceuse, the F minor Fantasie, and three Etudes. Her use of rubato was sensitive, and she brought out nuances of poetic meaning, despite the errancies of the instrument.

Her Bach group consisted of the Chromatic Fanatasia and Fugue, performed with power and brilliance, and Busoni's arrangement of the Chorale-Prelude, 'Ich ruf' zu dir." In a final group were contained Debussy's "Reflets dans l'eau," Gabriel Faure's F minor Impromptu, Charles Griffes' "The White Peacock" and Erno von Donnanyi's F minor Capriccio. As an extra number she added "La Danza di Olaf" by Ricardo Pick-Mangiagalli.

So definite was the impression of artistry left by Miss Ferguson that one would like to hear her again under more favorable conditions. Her talent is interesting in its potentialities.

Baptists Protest Respect Paid Pius By Congress

Charging that Congress' recent adjournment out of respect to Pope Pius XI is a violation of the principle of the separation of church and state, the congregation of Anacostia Baptist Church, led by the Rev. Thomas E. Boorde, pastor, has dispatched a letter of protest to President Roosevelt.

Another threat to the principle of the separation of church and state is the Social Security Board advisory council's recommendation that churches be taxed, stated the congregation in another letter of protest, sent to Robert L. Doughton, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Both letters, signed by the Rev. Mr. Boorde, followed action taken Sunday by the congregation.
